SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED COLOUR FEEDS.

Norwich Exhibitors. Read these.

At Crystal Palace Show, 1903. Every 1st prize winner, including championship diploma in open Norwich classes, were moulted on Royal Red. These are the classes where you can't win without colour. Mr. J. F. Bishop, Nottingham, writes, May 6th, 1908: "I have much pleasure in stating all my birds have been moulted on your Royal Red feed at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908. I won three champion classes in Norwich, including five specials for the best Norwich in the show, also many other prizes at Nottingham, Derby, Ilkeston, Wellingboro, etc." Mr. E. Baker, Cowes, May, 1908, writes: "Your Royal Red feed worked wonders again last season, as all will know with my winnings, which included three firsts at last Palace Show." Also have testimonials and orders this year from Messrs. Collings, Spilman, Cook, Tweedle, Barnes, Vardy, Lowe, Eckersley, Howe, Booth, Hope, Harland, Howard, Shaw, Bowyer, Morris, Hodder, Cleminson, Sherrington, Hill, and Stewart, etc., etc.,

Yorkshire Exhibitors. Read these.

Mr. J. Wilcock, Eccleshill, writes: "May 7th, 1908.—Sir,—Just a few lines to let you know all my birds have done extra well on your Royal Red feed. I was third for the great Yorkshire challenge cup, second for the Cinnamon-marked trophy, and third Shackleton trophy, and winner of L. and P.O.S. Cup, London; also won 50 specials, 63 firsts, 59 seconds, 51 thirds, 35 fourths, beside 100 other prizes, and second for Yorkshire Club specials. I think this speaks extra well for the grand bright rich colour I got, which pleases our judges so well. Send me half-cwt. at once." Mr. J. C. Barnes, Sheffield, writes: "February, 1908.—Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy I have great pleasure in informing you of the wonderful depth of colour I got in my birds last season by using your Royal Red. They came out exceedingly hot and beautifully bright, and not in the least bricky. At Sheffield Show, Nov. 8th-9th, I won silver challenge cup (making three years in succession), silver medal for hottest bird, special for best Buff cock, special for best hen, eight firsts, nine seconds, five thirds, and other honours. For last 10 years I have used no other feed, and I have great pleasure in recommending its use to all who are ambitious of procuring the highest colour at lowest cost." Also used last year by Messrs. Halliday, Cuthbertson, A. Hirst, Judge Battye, Greaves, Hartley, Parnell and Sons, Crisp, Nelson, Cowgill, Mallinson and Son, etc., etc.

Cinnamon Exhibitors.

READ THIS. Mr. E. Godley, Rishton, May 13th, 1908.—I may say your colour feed was extra last season, and I won more prizes than ever before which was

My colour was marvellous. Send me ½ cwt. Royal Red at once.

Also Messrs. Dormer's, Bentley's, Silk's, Howe's, Riding's, were moulted on Royal Red. Every 1st, 2nd, 3rd prize winner in Cinnamon section at last Crystal Palace Show were moulted solely on Royal Red.

Scotch Exhibitors. Read these.

At Glasgow and West of Scotland Norwich Plainhead Club Show in November, 1907, out of 16 colour-fed Norwich classes, 14 firsts were won with birds moulted on Royal Red. At Edinburgh Scottish National 8 firsts, 8 seconds, 9 thirds, 10 fourths in open Norwich. Every winner in Cinnamon section all moulted solely on Royal Red feed. Have scores more, but above should prove enough to satisfy you or anyone that there is only one colour feed on this earth—that's Sandiford's Royal Red. Prices Royal Red, 1 lb. 2/-, 2 lb. 3/5, 5 lb. 7/6; 14 lb. 17/-. Hot Natal, 2/- lb., 2 lb. 3/8. All carriage paid. Wholesalers and agents write for terms.

CLUB REPORTS.

DARLINGTON C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at the club room on May 27th, Mr. R. Todd presiding. The principal business was the making of arrangements for our next open show to be held on November 28th. After considerable discussion both at this and at previous meetings, it was unanimously decided that we do not join the Cage Bird Union, but run the show without their patronage, and thus allow members a free hand to show their birds at any show they think fit to. Rules and classification of schedule were then revised, with the following result: 17 open Canary classes, 12 open Mule and British classes, and 18 members' Canary and British bird classes. Judges elected: Messrs. W. A. Cowgill (all Canary classes), and Jas. Maddison (all Mule and British bird classes). The secretary then gave an outline of an effort to form a Northern Federation of cage bird societies, in order to encourage friendly inter-club competition at each other's open shows. The secretary having visited several of the other societies in the district who had reported favourably on the scheme, it was decided that we join in the endeavour to get it into working order before the coming show season opens, providing other societies in the district also join in time for this season, in order to make it a success. Rules and prizes for competition are to be settled later by a representative committee composed of members from each society joining. It was decided to hold our half-yearly club show on July 11th, when about 12 classes, Canaries and Mules (to be nest feather) and British birds (any age) will be staged. Judging will commence at two o'clock.—E. BRUNSKILL.

GATESHEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At the last meeting letters were read from Messrs. Crawhall and Lythgoe, and, after discussion on the addition to the C.B.U. rules, it was carried that the addition be agreed to. A deal of discussion took place over the addition of two novices classes in the British bird section of open show schedules, it being found to be very difficult to put them on. A resolution was carried that we add Novice Linnet and Novice A.O.S. Finch or Bunting. It was agreed to leave the appointment of stewards for first feather show over till next meeting, June 10th. Mr. Shafton Robson has very kindly given 5s. 6d. special for best bird exhibited by a novice, never having previously won a card at F.F. show. Entries for F.F. show will be taken at next meeting, and up to 20th.—THOS. TAYLOR, Hon. Secretary.

WALLSEND AND MID-TYNE C.B.A.

Monthly meeting held on May 28th at Station Hotel, Wallsend, Mr. William Ronald in the chair. There was a good muster of members. Mr. Ronald very feelingly referred to the demise of one of our members, Mr. William Richardson, which had occurred since last we met. A vote of condolence and sympathy was passed for the widow and son. A motion was put forward to allow members or friends admission to the nest feather show during judging by paying threepence, but an amendment that we refuse admission to everybody during judging (with the exception of officials) was carried. The schedule for annual show was then gone into, which was soon got over; last year's schedule was repeated, with the exception that we have added a class for unflighted hens in the Norwich section, and a 7s. 6d. selling class in the selling section. It was also carried that the secretary apply for the patronage of several specialist clubs. The meeting then closed.—JAS. JOHNSTON, Hon. Sec.

WORCESTER AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held May 28th at the Black Horse Hotel, Lowesmoor, Mr. W. Morgan in the chair. Lord Hindlip was elected president, and E. A. Golding, Esq, M.P. for Worcester, vice-president of our society. It was arranged to hold first feather show on Thursday, July 9th, when E. G. Hughes, Esq., has kindly consented to judge four classes for Canaries, and four classes for British birds, all classes being open. As our society is about to affiliate with the C.B.U., and has engaged one of the finest rooms in Worcester, our open show, fixed for November 19th, promises to be one of the best in the Midlands. We have already nine classes guaranteed, also eight specials promised up to the present, and we fully expect to get the whole of our classification guaranteed. To anyone desiring to become a member, I shall be pleased to send all particulars. A hearty vote of thanks to our worthy chairman and friend, W. D. Johnson, Esq. (of Malvern), for valuable hints received, brought another happy evening to a close.—A. E. BISHOP, Hon. Sec.

MACCLESFIELD AND DIST. C.B.S.

Discussion on the Norwich Plainhead.

A pleasant evening was spent in Daybrook-street School on May 28th. After the usual business, Mr. Chas. Oliver (treasurer) opened the discussion agreed on at our last meeting with regard to the Norwich Plainhead. Mr. Oliver said his main point was in regard to running perches, which, to his idea, were an abomination. They would notice, for instance, that some of their birds in particular, when they were on the top perches had a habit of letting their excreta drop time after time directly over the running perch below, with the result that the excreta accumulated. Again, many birds would be found to roost at night time on running perches, some of them perhaps behind the seed box, but most of them more often than not against the water pot. Whether the birds could see more there or not he could not say, but tho point was that there was bound to be a considerable amount of dampness arising from the water. Hence wheezing often arose in one's birds. Another point in connection with running perches was that many a young bird was spoilt because of them. They roosted on them and crouched there in a huddled heap, with their heads under their wings, and their tails doubled under. While such a bird was roosting it was bound to be growing, but it could not grow in the right manner. How, if necessary, could they expect such a bird to have nice wings and good tail carriage—the very things which went to make up smartness in their birds? No matter how good the bird they had bred was, if it had what was commonly called a hinged tail, under the best judges of the day it would be put down. Questions arising out of Mr. Oliver's remarks, and otherwise relating to the breeding and management of Norwich Canaries, were thrown right and left, and members seemed to gain more knowledge by this method than by means of an ordinary lecture. Mr. F. Broadhurst (secretary) proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman and Mr. Oliver; this, on being seconded by Mr. W. Lee, and responded to by those gentlemen, brought a most interesting evening to a close.—H. WALLWORTH, Assistant-Secretary.

THE SHOWS.

WESTERN COUNTIES O.S.

The first of this season's Nest Feather Shows was held at Boro. Arms, Plymouth, on May 27. Competition was for Members' Nest Feather Challenge Cups, which are held for the ensuing year by member making most points in each section, viz.:—Yorkshire, Norwich, Crest and Crestbred, A.O.V. of Canary, Mule, and British and Foreign birds, at the three nest feather shows held in May, June, and July of each year. Close on 100 birds were staged, the Norwich Canaries taking the lead with 26 entries in two classes. Crest and Crest-bred and Yorkshire Canaries were less than last year, but the British were well in advance. Mr. R. B. Tope acted as judge and his awards were well received.

YORKS. YELL.: 1, Harries; 2, and 3, Olver; 4, Dyer; all birds good in style and shape; the 2nd prize bird being preferred by some. BUFF: 1, Olver, good win; 2, and 3, Dyer, very promising; 4, Harries. NOR. YELL.:1, Spillman, grand substance, an easy win; 2, Snell, real topper, but it seemed to be the general opinion that it was a Buff; 3, Ruse, good size; 4, Garland. BUFF: 1, 3, Yates, winner of good shape; 3, stout, well-coloured exhibit; 2, Spillman, saddle marked, will be heard of again; 4, Snell. CREST: 1, 2, Richards, fine size, winner excels in shape of crest; 3, Haskell; 4, Ryder. CRESTBRED: 1, 2, Ryder, very promising; 2, some preferred to win; 3, Richards; 4, Parsons. CINNAMON: 1, 2, Pope; winner, good yellow. GOLDFINCH, ETC.: 1, Large, Goldfinch, in splendid trim; 2, Harries, another good Goldy; 3, 4, Wills. LINNET, ETC.: 1, 4, Fridhon, Linnets, former noted winner in Devonshire; 2, Wills, good coloured bird; 3, Snell, nice Twite. A.O.S. SEED-EATER: 1, 2, 3, 4, Snell, good team, Chaffinch leading, followed by Yellow Bunting. INSECTIV. BRIT.: 1, Snell, nice Wheatear; 2, Pridhon, grand Swallow. FOR.: 1, Snell, fine Scarlet Tanager; 2, Rose, nice Siberian Gildfinch.

ALNWICK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A very successful meeting and table show for British birds were held at headquarters on May 28th, Mr. H. P. Staig in the chair. Mr. Joe Robinson officiated as judge, and placed the birds to the satisfaction of all. GOLDFINCH, ETC.: 1, and spl best bird in show, Rennison, Bullfinch, nice cap and good colour, well staged; 2, 3, Thain, 2nd Goldfinch, nice bars and buttons; 3rd Goldfinch; vhc, c, Forster; hc, Straughan. GREENFINCH, ETC.: 1, vhc, Rennison, 1st Bramble, good colour and markings; 2, Staig, Bramble, little larger than winner, but fails in colour. LINNET, GREY: 1, Rennison, good nutty colour, easy win; 2, Baxter, shade smaller; 3, Staig, field-moulted. SISKIN, ETC.: 1, Rennison, Redpoll, nice bib and size, wins; 2, Thain, Redpoll, smaller, this being the only fault; 3, Baxter, nice bib, fine size. Most points throughout show were as follows: R. F. Rennison, 39; W. Thain, 16; and Baxter and Staig tie for 3rd place, 10 each. Members are requested to attend next meeting.—R. F. RENNISON, Sec.

NORTHERN B.B.M. AND F.B.C.

At our monthly meeting and table show, held on May 20th, Mr. McKenzie occupied the chair. Mr Sheppard judged, and gave every satisfaction. GREENFINCH: 1, 2, Maddison; 3, Irving. LINNET: 1, 2, Maddison; 3, Taylor. SISKIN, ETC.: 1, Slack; 2, Maddison; 3, Taylor. Mr. McKenzie gave a nice framed picture for best bird, which was won by Mr. Maddison. Mr. G. Taylor also gave ½-stone Spanish seed for second best, which prize was won by Mr. Slack. While judging was going on the business of the club was done. It was decided to have two more classes for the show at our next meeting on June 17th—one for Goldfinch or Bullfinch, and one for Chaffinch or Bramblefinch. Mr. Slack will judge. We also enrolled three new members, this bringing the membership up to about 50. We hope there are more to follow. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Sheppard for judging, and to Mr. McKenzie for presiding over the meeting, brought a most enjoyable occasion to a close.—J. R. SLACK, Hon. Secretary.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

The first table show of young birds of the present season was held at Lockhart's Cafe, Grainger-street, Newcastle, on May 27th. Though early in the season, eleven birds turned up in the two classes, and some excellent quality was on view. Mr. Ellwood's winning clear looked like making a very good bird, while Mr. Eaton's wing-marked, winner in class 2, gives promise of making into a good bird, especially if it should turn out a hen. There was a good attendance of members and friends; we were specially pleased to see our old friend Mr. Thompson present from South Shields, and we hope that at our next show he will have some birds old enough to bring up. He has promised to guarantee a novice Yorkshire class at Shields Show. I have also heard from our president, Mr. Cuthbertson, that he will guarantee a novice class, so that novices should buck up and get some good birds, as this makes six classes for novices competition at northern shows. The following new members were admitted, previous to show: Messrs. J. E. Atkinson (Low Fell) and S. Eaton (Gosforth). Mr. J. Shepherd judged, and gave every satisfaction. CLEARS: 1, 2, Ellwood; 3, hc, Davison; vhc, Eaton; c, Harrison. TICKED, ETC.: 1, 3, Eaton; 2, Ellwood. Members please note next date, June 17th, when we join with the Northern British B. and M.C., the two dates coinciding. Mr. Crawhall will judge. Mr. Shepherd has promised to judge our first feather show in August.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Hon. Sec.

ENTRIES CLOSE.

Doncaster.—June 10th. F. H. Chafer, 9, Market Place, Doncaster.

Wild Young Life.

Young Blackbirds are big clumsy fellows. They alight on a fence rail with a perceptible flop, their tails shooting up on a level with the back as they sway to and fro to steady themselves. Some of these big hen birds are quite a golden russet in colour about the upper breast and throat, especially when the evening sun glances upon them; so ruddy do they appear that one sometimes fails to recognise them the instant they alight. These early birds are quite unattached. They roam the hedgerows and gardens, and later, when the fruit is ripe, will require a deal of watching. It is these, more than the old birds, that rifle the strawberry beds and currant bushes.

The Whitethroat's Nest.

A favourite sight for the flimsy home of the Greater Whitethroat is among the nettles and rank herbage by the side of the hedgerow, often within a few feet of the footpath; and so cunningly is it hidden, that unless the parent birds are detected going to or from the nest, they generally manage to rear the brood. While incubating, the hen bird slips off so quietly that one may be pardoned for thinking a field mouse had rustled the tall grass.

The Home of the Wren.

Few birds build such neat little homes as the Wren, and few use so many different materials in their construction. This season the following have come under observation. One under an old lodge composed entirely of grass and straw; another in the ivy of green moss; a third of dry grass stems in an old hay stack; and a fourth of dead leaves built against the trunk of a large beach tree. The colour and materials of which each was composed blended closely with the surroundings.

Concerning Cuckoos.

Cuckoos are widely distributed, and those of Southern Africa have the same propensity for occasionally depositing eggs closely resembling in colour the eggs of the birds they intend to be foster parents to their young, as the Cuckoos of this country have, and it is equally uncertain if one bird is able to deposit eggs varying in colour, or if all her eggs are uniform. It has also been proved that the bird must first deposit the egg upon the ground, for in many cases the egg has been found in a nesting hole much too small for the Cuckoo to enter.

FANCIERS FESTIVITIES.

Swansea and District C.B.S. Supper and Concert.

A grand supper and concert took place on May 28th at the Market Restaurant, Oxford Street. About 50 sat at the table and were well looked after by the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Curran. Supper commenced at about 8.30, and was so unmistakably a success that a repetition was proposed at the first convenient opportunity. Letters of regret at being absent were received from Mr. J. B. Evans (Sketty), and Mr. R. W. Jones (Gersemon). Supper over, all adjourned to the concert room, where a most enjoyable musical evening was spent. Mr. J. H. Ford (chairman) opened the programme with an appropriate speech, afterwards calling upon Mr. Griff. Charles for a song. Mr. Charles obliged with "The Old Soldier" in a very creditable manner, as he did on two other occasions—a song in the Somerset brogue and "The Beautiful Picture." Mr. Larry Warner, the well-known Swansea coon singer, next obliged with "Put Your Troubles on the Shelf," "Oysters," and lastly a very comic impersonation of "Navaho," entitled, "Starve Her, Joe." At this stage Mr. Phil. Jenkins made a speech, and remarked on the efficient services of both secretaries, Messrs. Alf. and Thos. Hitchings. He presented each with a handsome gold watch-chain seal. The Bros. Hitchings suitably responded. Mr. W. Hammacott then obliged with a well-sung "He didn't have a Look at them at all," and again with "In the Smoke" and "The Old Bull and Bush." The programme having been completed, Mr. Rd. Mugford was elected a member. A vote of thanks was afterwards accorded Mr. and Mrs. Curran and another to the entertainers. Mr. Willie Thomas very ably accompanied, and Messrs. Donnell and Saunders' gramophone selections were much appreciated. The evening closed with the singing of "God Save the King," and was a great success, reflecting credit on all members of the society.—ALF. HITCHINGS, sec.

OUTINGS.

GRIMSBY AND DISTRICT O.S.

The first ramble took place on May 17th. The party, numbering 21, left Grimsby by brake for Croxby Pond (the beautiful grounds of Lord Yarborough, who had kindly given the necessary permission). The weather was all that could be desired, and a very enjoyable day was spent. After a pleasant drive lasting nearly two hours, the destination was reached, when the party proceeded to investigate the woods and ponds, to ascertain what progress the wild birds were making with their breeding operations. The tree-climbing party were much in evidence, some very high trees being examined, with good results; bark was knocked off both the trees, and the climbers. Various kinds of nests and eggs were discovered, including a "Coot's" containing eggs, which nest was photographed by Mr. Kilvington, but no young birds were discovered, with the one exception of a Wild Duck, in a nest, and this, curiously enough, in a fork of a tree seven feet from the ground—a most unlikely place. It had met an untimely end. Tea was prepared and served by Mrs. Moore, and full justice was done to it, the whole party playing the part of the "stowaways." After tea we were photographed. We arrived home at about 9 p.m., all expressing a desire to have another ramble at an early date.—MOORE and CROWSTON, Hon. Secs.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

On May 30th a ramble took place to Kingsweston and district. The party, numbering 14, were taken through the woods of Mr. P. Napier Miles (by kind permission of Ivor Forestier-Walker, Esq.), our guide being Mr. Taylor, head gardener. Needless to say, there was plenty of material for ornithologists to work upon. Nests of the following birds were found, viz., Jenny Wren, Whitethroat, Sedge Warbler, Greenfinch, Thrush, Blackbird, and Wood Pigeon. Great interest was evinced throughout, and when the woods were left we were taken through the gardens and greenhouses, where some fine fruit was on show. I repeat "on show," as the grapes, at any rate, were sour. After leaving the gardens, hockey was indulged in, one of the members showing in fine form. A thunderstorm soon made the members look for shelter, and a dash was made for Mr. Saunders' hotel at Lawrence Weston. Here a meat tea was provided, and justice having been done to same, songs were rendered by Messrs. Clark, Howard, Martin, Cooper, Saunders, and others. In a neat speech Mr. Trubody moved a vote of thanks to those responsible for the day's enjoyment, and the secretary supported same. Mr. C. E. Brown suitably replied, as also did Mr. Taylor. Unfortunately, the rain did not cease, and this necessitated a brisk walk for two miles, Bristol being reached just after 10 o'clock. Excepting for the rain a most enjoyable time was spent.—W. H. MANLEY, Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND CAGE BIRD ASSOCIATION.

A ramble, arranged during the past week by several of our members as a preliminary to the official outing, took place on May 30th, and was participated in by a good number of members. We left Sunderland by the 1.5 train, amidst a terrific rainstorm. On reaching our destination, Hexham, about 32 miles from home, we were much gratified to find the weather all that could be desired. The usual bird nesting operations soon began. Under the guidance of Messrs. W. F. Swan and J. Riseborough, we proceeded to the Swallowship Woods. The first lane we entered was bordered on one side by a well-wooded dene, and here we were greeted by a perfect melody of song. Several Thrushes and Blackbirds were to be seen, perched on trees, giving full rein to their vocal powers. Further up the lane, we noticed one of the finest cock Chaffinches it has ever been our lot to see. Its beauty made several of our British bird men look with longing eyes upon him, one fancier remarking that here was the "Cock o' the North." Entering another lane we proceeded to search for nests, and soon found one containing a Thrush sitting on four eggs. About ten yards away we found a Blackbird's nest containing five eggs, and, proceeding up the lane, many more were found, principally those of Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Hedge Accentors, most of them containing eggs. No doubt these were the second clutches of the season. Continuing, we came upon a Cole Tit's nest, which one of our party accidentally pulled in two owing to a slip down the bank at the foot of the hedge. The nest contained five young ones nearly ready to leave it, and, replacing the nest in the best manner possible (a difficult thing with these), we returned the young ones, the old birds during the whole time creating a creditable amount of noise considering their size. A few yards further on another Cole Tit's nest was found, also containing young, but this one was not interfered with. We very soon found innumerable other nests of Blackbirds, Thrushes, Chaffinches, and Greenfinches, a Robin's, and several Hedge Accentors' homes. Just before reaching the Woods, we saw a very fine specimen of the Missel Thrush, perched on a tree, and not far away a Whitethroat was seen on a telegraph wire. We entered the Woods, where, of course, nests are not so plentiful as in the more open places, but what was lacking in nests was amply made up for in the way of insects, and one of our members, Mr. Allison Elliot, who is a keen naturalist as well as a British bird fancier, entertained the party with some very interesting accounts of the habits, etc., of some of these insects. We also came upon a fine colony of ants. We then made back for the town, but in another direction, and bird nesting was resumed. Numerous nests of different species of birds were found. Arriving at the town we proceeded to satisfy the inner man. After this we again sallied forth into the town, our intention being to call upon that well-known British bird fancier, Mr. Welch, of Hexham. As the evening was getting on, however, we decided to postpone our visit. Sauntering through the town we inspected Hexham Abbey, and other places of interest, and then made our way to the riverside, taking the road towards Corbridge, the beautiful scenery of the upper reaches of the Tyne being very much admired. En route, several of the younger members of our party could not resist the temptation of searching the bushes and hedges, and many more nests were found before we finally retraced our steps to the town, and from thence to the station, and thus home, after having spent one of the most enjoyable days we have ever had. The outing was voted on all hands a huge success, which promises well for our official ramble. —W. REID, Joint Secretary.

PRESTON ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

The first ramble took place on May 24th. Taking train from Preston at 9.50 the party, numbering 15, journeyed to Longridge, justly celebrated for its stone quarries. Having passed through the quaint little town, the field roads were taken to Thornby, where an exciting hunt after a weazel and its family enlivened the walk! Here a pair of Mallards and numerous Snipe were flushed, but no nests were found. As might be expected the nests of the Thrush and Ouzel were most abundant in the districts covered by the ramble, there being 23 of the former and 19 of the latter—some with eggs and many with young. The next most abundant species was the Greenfinch. Others included the hen Meadow Pipit, Willow Warbler, Hedge Sparrow, Missel Thrush, Robin, Pied Wagtail, Moorhen, Green Woodpecker, Wren, Chaffinch, Dipper, Sandpiper, Starling, and House Sparrow. Many birds whose nests were not found were both seen and heard, the most notable being the Nuthatch, which species in this part of the country is very scarce. Others were the Whinchat, Wood Warbler, Chiffchaff, Blue, Coal, Marsh and Great Tits, Tree-creeper, Yellow and Grey Wagtails, Spotted Flycatcher, Swallow, Martin, Sand Martin, Swift, Linnet, Lesser Redpoll, Bullfinch, Reed and Yellow Buntings, Magpie, Rook, Jays, Skylarks, Kingfisher, Cuckoo, Ringdove, Pheasant and Partridge, Red Grouse, Landrail, Lapwing, Curlew, and a Black-headed Gull—a pretty fair list for one day's ramble. Leaving Thornby we went by field-paths to Chipping, where a halt was called for lunch. Greatly refreshed, the ramblers again took to the field, where the necessary arrangements having been made, the secretary took a photograph of the party. Then the ascent of Parlick Pike was commenced. Though not very high, it occasioned a rather stiff climb, and particularly in rainy weather, as on this occasion. Fred. Issott's remarks were certainly picturesque, whatever else they were! After resting a short time on the summit, the descent was made to Bailey Hey, where we had some refreshments. Then the beautiful valley of the Rim Brook was reached, and the stream which winds its way through wood and field, always delightful, was followed down to the station. On the way a small party which had become detached from the rest had the good fortune to catch sight of a fine pair of red deer; these are seldom seen in this neighbourhood. The latter part of the walk was shorn of a deal of its interest by the rain, and by our having to hurry in order to catch the train. Preston was reached at 8.30, the ramblers all agreeing that although the walk was a rather long one—over 20 miles—it had been most enjoyable and interesting.—W. HY. HEATHCOTE, Secretary.

"Cage Birds," 154, Fleet St., London

The Art of Cage-making.

By A. W. CURTIS.

Before starting to make a cage it will be necessary for readers to make sure of getting a suitable wood with which to make their cages. Fanciers in London will have no difficulty in getting almost any kind of wood cut into boards of various thicknesses and planed up ready for use. Residents in country districts are not so fortunate, and in consequence are obliged to send away for their material; fanciers having to do this, will not find it so difficult nowadays, as they may, by looking through the advertisement columns of CAGE BIRDS, find a number of firms willing to supply almost everything requisite for making cages.

What Kind of Wood to Use.

The kind of wood I use and recommend as most suitable for cages is that known as yellow pine. It is nice and soft, and therefore easy to plane, and if good quality stuff, is pretty free from large knots and shakes, and does not warp so much as yellow deal.

Another suitable wood is that known as American white-wood. This can be had in the rough state, i.e., as left by the saw, and also ready prepared. It can be had of any thickness and of all widths, and is very handy for cage backs, as it can be procured wide enough to make jointing-up unnecessary—this being at all times preferable, either for large or small cages.

Yet another wood, known in the trade as three-ply, makes good backs for cages. This is made by glueing together three layers of wood, each about 1-16th. in. in thickness. The grain of the centre layer runs at right angles, or across the two outer layers, the whole making a board about 3-16ths in. thick. This manufactured article is very strong, considering the substance, and makes excellent cage backs seeing that it does away with the necessity for jointing.

Making a Box-cage.

I would advise the novice just starting to make cages to try his hand first on a small box-cage, such as the one shown in Fig. 37. This will be found a very handy-sized cage for a single bird, such as a Canary, Linnet, Goldfinch, etc., and will be found large enough to moult Canaries in. As figured on sketch, readers will note that the inside measurements are given as: Height, 12 ins.; length, 13 ins.; and depth, from back to front, 8¾ ins. A 12 in. by 9 in. removable wire front will suit a cage made to the sizes given.

It will require for the top and bottom two pieces of board, 14⅛ ins. long by 9ins. wide by ⅜ in. thick. For the ends, two pieces of board 12 ins. long by 8¾ ins. wide by ⅜ in. thick. For the sand tray or drawer-board, one piece of board 12¾ ins. long by 8¾ ins. (full) wide by ⅜ in. thick; also one piece (for the front of sand tray) 13 ins. long by ¾ in. wide by ⅜ in. thick. In addition to these, have enough ½ in. by ⅜ in. to go round on the top of sand tray. For the front rail get one piece 13 ins. long by 1⅜ ins. wide by ⅜ in. thick.

Readers will note that I have given 12¾ ins. for length of sand tray; this is for the purpose of allowing ⅛ of an inch liberty at each end of tray so that it can be more easily withdrawn. The piece on the front of tray, if made 13 ins. long and allowed to run past each end ⅛ of an inch, will keep the tray an equal distance from each end, and at the same time fill up the full length of the opening at front of the cage.

For the back, the cage-box will require a piece of board 14⅛ ins. long by 12⅝ ins. wide, by ⅜ in. thick. I would advise readers not to put a rail under front edge of the cage top as it is impossible to see what's going on behind it during the warm weather when the mites are about.

Some Minor but Important Details.

I favour the sand tray (or, as some call it, the drawer-board) for sanitary reasons, as from experience I know it is more convenient to be able to remove the board when it is soiled and wash it, than to wash out the bottom of the cage, especially during the breeding season, when one is unable to remove the birds from their cages even for a short time, for fear of upsetting them.

Readers may think I have advised the use of rather thick wood, viz., ⅜ in., but they must bear in mind that when ordering ⅜ in. prepared boards, it will not be more than 5-16ths, and if bought in the rough state it will require to be planed up on both sides, and by the time this has been done, the board will not be more than 5-16ths of an inch thick.

The rod intended for a cage the length of one described, will require to be 14⅛ ins. long. Put a mark across it ¼ in. from each end; then from each of those two marks measure 5-16ths of an inch (this being the thickness of cage ends), and square across as before.

The shorter rod should be 12 ins. in length, to be the height of cage ends. This should have a mark squared across it ¾ of an inch from one end only; then measure 1¾ ins. from the first mark and square across. To the ¾ in. mark will be the height of sand-tray front; and from the ¾ in. to the 1¾ ins. is the height of the front rail.

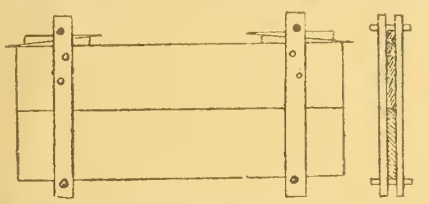

Fig. 38.—Cage back clamped up.
Fig. 39.—End view of cage back in clamps.

When setting out a rod it is best to use the point of a penknife to mark with, as knife marks will not get rubbed off. In the case of those not accustomed to using a rule, it would be an advantage for them to have also a rod for the width of cage back, and one for the length of sand-tray. The former rod will have to be 12⅝ ins. long—this being the height of cage over all. The sand-tray rod should be 12¾ ins. long.

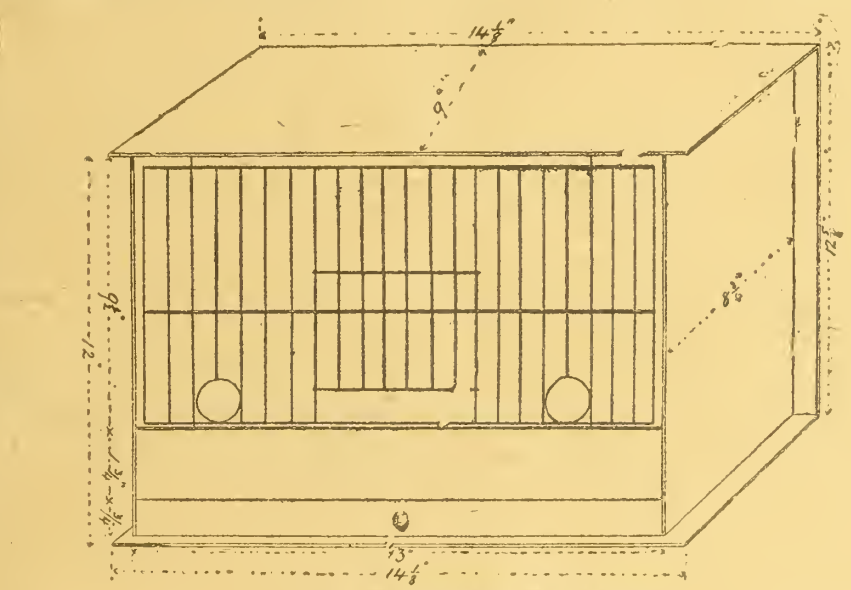

Fig. 37. Box Cage for Single Bird.

By Fig. 37 readers will observe that I have allowed the top and bottom to be wide enough to project ¼ of an inch in front of the ends; the top and bottom also run beyond ends ¼ of an inch. The back, too, is intended to run past the ends ¼ of an inch, this being a much stronger way than that of putting the back inside the ends and the top and bottom, as the nails or screws are not so near the ends of boards, and not, therefore, so likely to split the wood as when the top and bottom finish flush with the ends. The back of the box-cage should be screwed or nailed (screwed in preference) on the outside and not fitted inside, as I have heard it advised. The former is much the easier way, especially for the novice; it is also much the quicker and stronger way.

If backs are let in and your material is not properly seasoned, i.e., dry, you will not have long to wait before a shrinkage occurs in the width of your stuff, which means a space between the underside of top and the top edge of the cage back. This, of course, means fine breeding quarters for red mite—a very unwelcome guest for any fancier to have to entertain. Again, a back screwed or nailed on the outside cannot cast or warp so much, as none of the screws or nails would in that case have been put in endways of the grain.

The Value and Use of Rods.

Before cutting up a board into short lengths, it is always best to cut off first two rods, one to the length of top, bottom, and back of cage, and the other to the height of ends. Almost any waste pieces of stuff will answer the purpose, such as a ripping off the edge of a board.

Now if a little care is exercised in the setting out of rods referred to, it will be the means of saving a lot of time, and probably of preventing a waste of material. For instance, when marking out your boards ready for cutting off, the rods can be used instead of measuring off every length with the rule.

Cutting the Component Parts of the Cage.

To make the cage to figured dimensions one will require an 8-ft. length of 9 ins. by ⅜ in. board; but I would advise getting a 10-ft. or 12-ft. length, as the raw recruit may have the misfortune to spoil one or two pieces when first attempting the making of a cage.

Having procured your board, mark one end of it by putting a square mark across it about 1 in. from the end, and cut off the 1-in. piece. Then lay on your longest rod, keeping it flush with end just squared. Make a pencil-mark at the other end of rod and use your square when making mark across. Slide your square along ⅛ of an inch and then make another mark. The ⅛ of an inch between the two lines is to allow for the saw-cut and shooting. Now move your rod along until the end is level with last mark made, and then mark at the other end of the rod, allowing ⅛ of an inch as before.

You will then require to cut off your pieces the length of the longest rods, one being for the top, one for the bottom, and two with which to make the back and rails.

Next lay on your short rod and mark off two pieces for the ends. Then cut off a piece to the length of sand-tray rod. If your stuff is not already prepared, the next thing is to plane it up on both sides, and shoot the edges and ends of top and bottom.

To allow the front edges of the top and bottom to overhang the ends, it will be necessary to reduce the ends to 8¾ ins. wide. To do this, first run a gauge line ¼ of an inch on the flat, and rip off to gauge line; shoot the edge just sawn, and your end is ready. You will now want to rip a board down for the cage back. As your board is only 9 ins. wide (and for your cage-back you require 12⅝ ins., you will want a piece of board 3⅝ ins. wide to joint on to the 9-in. board. It will be as well to rip this piece off 3¾ ins.; this will give you an ⅛ of an inch to play with, when shooting the joint, etc.

Making Cage-backs.

Fig. 27 shows position of plane when shooting an edge ready for jointing. The two pieces to form a back will have to be glued together. To make a good job of this, it is best when jointing up backs for long cages to have two pairs of clamps (see Fig. 38). These can be easily made out of four pieces of ⅜ in. by 1½ ins., and if made about 24 ins. long, will take any cage-back up to 20 ins. wide. All that is required is to bore with the ⅝-in. centre bit holes to suit the widths of your cage-backs, allowing about 1 in. liberty for folding wedges. Plane up a piece of wood about 14 ins. long, to make four pieces 3½ ins. long to fit your ⅝-in. holes. Cut two pairs of wedges as shown, and you will not have much difficulty in holding your cage-back together while the glue is drying. For the back of a small cage, such as the one we are on now, one of the clamps will be sufficient to hold it together. Fig. 39 shows a cage-back wedged in clamps.

At Dawn of Day.

The early morning song of the birds is almost simultaneous. Sometimes a restless Hedge Accentor, with his shrill notes, will be the first to "salute the morn"; another time the loud-voiced Thrush takes the lead, but, generally speaking, the whole of the woodland choir commences together. Blackbirds and Thrushes, Whitethroats and Robins, Blackcaps and Nightingales, and a host of others, lend their voices to the chorus, and to sing and try to out-sing each other appear to be the first waking thoughts of the feathered minstrels of the woods. Out in the open where each tiny blade of tall grass and herbage is heavily laden with dew, a score of Skylarks may be heard overhead, their silvery notes sounding clear and distinct in the still morning air. These early summer mornings are delightful, and no bird-lover should miss the opportunity of watching and listening to the birds at the hour that they are least suspicious and consequently easier to approach.

TWITTERINGS.

I had sixteen letters in reply to my last advertisement, writes Mr. J. Greatrex (Rugby), thanks to your valuable paper.

A Robin's nest is reported to have been built in a hole in the wall of a saw-mill at Wigton, close to where the machinery is in motion.

We are asked by Mr. F. H. Chafer, sec. of the Doncaster show, to call attention to the fact that the last day for receiving entries is Wednesday next, June 10th.

The best guide in the world for amateurs is CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. C. Quinn (Donnybrook). A breeder for six years, I have never missed a copy. Bird-keeping is a grand hobby.

Kindly note that I have changed my address from 97, Ripponden Road, to 9, Greenacres Road, Oldham, writes Mr. A. Ackroyd, of Messrs. Ackroyd and Wild, Cage Bird Supply Stores.

The judges elected for our open show to be held on November 6th and 7th, writes Mr. J. W. Marsden, hon. sec. of the Blackburn and Dis. C.B.S., are Messrs. A. Wellings, J. Walsh, and T. W. Walton.

On Whit Monday the members of the Guisborough and Dis. "Priory" C.B.S. will, Mr. G. Atkinson, the sec., informs us, meet at Wear's Cafe, at 1 o'clock, for a ramble on Col. Chaloner's estate, when friends will be welcomed.

The members of the Wolverhampton and Dis. C.B.S. will travel by the 2.25 p.m. train, writes Mr. F. Howes, the hon. sec., to Albrighton (Great Western Railway), on June 8th, for their country ramble, when I hope a good muster will turn up.

The committee of the Llanelly and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. J. Simon, the hon. sec., have changed the date of the society's open show from November 24th to January 5th, owing to the fact that the Cardiff show is to be held on November 25th and 26th.

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

Owing to the Whitsuntide Holidays, the office of "Cage Birds" will be closed from Saturday to Monday next, inclusive.

Will Advertisers and Correspondents generally kindly note that all matter intended for next week's issue should be posted early, to reach us on Tuesday, June 9th.

We are holding two first feather shows this year, writes Mr. Geo. Hy. Barnwell, secretary of the Harrogate C.B.S.—one on June 20th, when the judge will be Mr. H. J. Chittenden (Bradford), and the other on July 18th, when Mr. S. Dean (Great Horton), will judge.

We hear from Mr. C. Irvine, secretary of the Ayr and Dis. C.B.S., that a ramble to Eglinton Policies is to take place on Saturday, June 6th, when members of the society will meet at Newton station at 2 o'clock. Friends and fanciers are invited.

The members of the cage bird section of the Walthamstow Fanciers' Association are cordially invited to join a combined outing on Saturday next, June 6th, to Epping Forest, writes Mr. Albert B. Forse, the hon. sec. Full particulars are given in this issue by the sec. of the Leyton C.B.A.

We recently heard of a valuable Canary being killed by a stray cat getting through a ventilator of a bird-room during the night. Every one should see that all openings into bird-rooms are made too small for these pests to find an entrance, or protected in some effective manner.

I am pleased to say I have now nearly recovered after a long illness, arising from an operation on account of appendicitis, writes Mr. J. C. Hayes, hon. sec. of the Rotherham C.B.S. I was under for sixteen weeks. I can now, therefore, attend to all correspondence in connection with the society.

Through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. P. Morris (Ryde, Isle of Wight). I sold from March to April £63 worth of birds. This speaks volumes for your paper as an advertising medium. I have in my possession a white Starling which was caught near Ryde, where another was caught last year.

We have decided to hold our annual open show, writes Mr. J. C. Hayes, hon. sec. of the Rotherham C.B.S., on November 20th and 21st, the gentlemen elected to judge at same being Messrs. W. Vardy and W. H. Shackleton. The show will be held under Cage Bird Union rules. Our Nest Feather show will be held in the St. George's Hall, on June 27th, when our old friend, Mr. Webster, will judge.

Ramsden's Pure Peppers.—Valuable special prizes have been offered to and accepted by the following clubs:—Yorkshire Union, Yorkshire Canary Club, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshire Club, Southern Norwich Plainhead Club, Southern Yorkshire Canary Club, for points gained by members colour feeding their exhibits only and solely on Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Ramsden's Peppers are the finest the world produces.—(ADVT.)

Mr. T. Pope, hon. sec. Western Counties O.S. (Plymouth), writes: We have accepted with regret Mr. G. E. Weston's resignation of the post of judge at our annual show (owing to inability to leave London in mid-week), and have now engaged Mr. H. Norman for the Hybird, British and Foreign Bird sections.

We are not members of the Cage Bird Union and are going to run our society without their "advantages," writes Mr. E. Brunskill, hon. sec. of the Darlington C.B.S. Had they not passed the resolution re the granting of licenses, of course we should have probably applied for a license as in previous years. Our judges are: for Canaries, Mr. W. A. Cowgill (Bradford), and for Mules and British birds, Mr. Jas. Maddison (Newcastle-on-Tyne).

For the fifteenth year in succession, a pair of Tom-tits have built a nest in a letter-box at Uttoxeter Workhouse. The birds take no notice of the letters dropped into their nesting-place, but their domestic operations are prevented from interruption as much as possible by orders from the master. The male bird hops into the box through the slit provided for letters to take food to his companion, who, it is stated, is sitting on 14 eggs.

OBITUARY.

Mr. M. H. ROBINSON (Bradford).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. F. Western, sec. of the Manningham C.B.A., that I have to announce the death of one of our oldest members, Mr. M. H. Robinson, of 43, Mortimer Street, Four Lane Ends, Bradford, who passed away on May 30th. He met with an accident about five months since while following his employment, and four weeks ago his leg had to be amputated, and it is this which has been the cause of his death. He was one of the founders of our society, and it was only four years ago that he resigned the secretaryship. He was well respected by all with whom he came into contact. He always had a pleasant word for everybody, and in him we have lost one of the best of our workers. I write on behalf of the members, all of whom have expressed their deepest sympathy with the deceased man's family in this their bereavement. He leaves a wife and two children.

Mr. T. MURGATROYD (Manningham).

We regret to learn of the death of Mr. T. Murgatroyd, of Manningham, partner in the firm of Messrs. Murgatroyd and Son, the well-known exhibitors of Yorkshire Canaries, which took place on May 27th, under circumstances of a most distressing character. The deceased, who had reached 50 years of age, was well-liked in Yorkshire circles, and his many fancier friends will be grieved to know that he met an untimely end by his own hand. Messrs. Murgatroyd and Son have shown for years with considerable success, at the last Crystal Palace show their noted unevenly-marked standing first in a very strong class. At the inquest the widow of the deceased stated that her husband sent her on an errand, and on returning she found him lying senseless on the floor, bleeding profusely from a gash in the throat. He had been troubled and low-spirited for some time because he was unable to succeed in his business. Asked by the coroner if her husband had any other trouble, the witness stated that the landlord would not let them open on Sunday, which was their best day for business. A verdict was returned to the effect that the deceased committed suicide while in an unsound state of mind.

The Jarrow and Hebburn and Dis. C.B.F.S. will hold their first annual Nest Feather show on June 13th, in the Alexandra Hotel, High Street, Jarrow, writes Mr. J. T. Carrick, the hon. sec., in a room kindly lent by Mr. D. O'Brien, who also gives a good cash special. Judging will commence at 4 o'clock; judge, Mr. J. Maddison (Newcastle). Will members please send in bumping entries to me by Friday evening, June 12th?

I was pleased to see my Hybrid, Redpoll-Bullfinch, depicted on front page of CAGE BIRDS last week, writes Mr. C. J. Ward (Uttoxeter). I consider it exactly like him; it could not have been better even if the bird had been photographed. Great credit is due to your artist, Mr. Norman, whom I heartily thank. I have sold my Linnet-Bullfinch Hybrid, "Eclipse," to that well-known exhibitor, Mr. C. T. Maxwell, at a good figure.

The members of the Leyton and Dis. C.B.A. are organising an outing to Epping Forest on Saturday, June 6th, under the guidance of Mr. J. S. Clarke. The fanciers of the North London and Walthamstow societies are joining us, and any fanciers who would also like to join us will be most heartily welcomed. Trains leave Liverpool Street at 1.11 p.m., Leyton 1.31 p.m., and Leytonstone 1.35, arriving at Loughton at 1.53 p.m. Any fancier missing any of these trains can "pick up" the party at Connaught Waters at about 2.30. Tea will be provided at the Owl at 6.30 o'clock.—B. F. FORSE, hon. sec.

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping. That volume is

and this year it has made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

Such Marvellous Value has never before been offered.

See what You Get for Your Money.

Coloured Plate.
An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramble-finch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

Calendar.
A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"Work of the Year."
A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"Washing and Preparing Birds for Exhibition."
Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries."
A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many excellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"Pairs Matched for Breeding."
A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"The Breeding of Hybrids."
An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"The Keeping of British Birds."
A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"Some Easily Obtainable Foreign Birds."
An account of some pretty and hardy species, with information on their caging and feeding.

"Review of the Exhibition Year."
Every breed of Canary, together with Hybrids, British and Foreign birds, has its progress on the show-bench during 1907 dealt with by leading judges, specialists, and experts, and the names of the principal winning exhibitors are given.

"The Diseases of Cage-Birds."
A feature in itself worth the whole cost of the volume. Diseases and accidents are described, and the best medicines and methods of treatment stated in simple language, and very fully and completely. It will save you many valuable birds.

"Glossary of Terms."
The curious terms used by fanciers are fully explained. Reference to the alphabetically-arranged columns will at once tell you the meaning of such expressions as jonque, leafy feather, mooning, rowing, and the like.

In addition to these features will be found a

Directory to Cage-Bird Clubs, Associations and Societies, with particulars of subscriptions, etc., list of Officials and Secretary's name and address.
Directory to Prominent Breeders and Exhibitors of Cage-Birds.
Directory to Judges of Cage-Birds.
Standards and Scales of Points for Canaries and British Birds.
Useful Postal and other Information.
Directory to the Bird Trade.
Ruled Cash Account, etc.
Six full-page illustrations on art paper, and numerous other drawings.

A bulky and splendidly-illustrated catalogue of cages, aviaries, appliances, etc., has just been issued by Mr. J. Walsh, of Pheasant Aviaries, Blackburn, and fanciers desirous of keeping up-to-date in their bird-room fittings, etc., should at once send a postcard for a copy, which will be forwarded post free. Its contents will be found very instructive, and in addition to cages and the like, Mr. Walsh supplies every kind of seeds and bird-foods at the lowest prices consistent with high quality.

Will secretarics of societies catering for all branches of the Fancy kindly note, writes Mr. A. Watson, sec. of the Civil Service F.A., that I shall shortly be calling my committee together to make arrangements for holding our annual show in conjunction with one or more societies. Any society willing to join hands should let me know at once, when their names will be placed before the committee. Threo societies have fully discussed the matter. My address is, 116, Maurice Avenue, Noel Park, Wood Green, N.

The Nest Feather show of the Wallsend and Mid. Tyne C.B.A., writes Mr. Jas. Johnston, the hon. sec., will be held at Station Hotel, Wallsend, on June 6th. There are 13 classes for Canaries, 1 for Hybrids and light Mules, and 1 for dark Mules. We shall be pleased to have a good muster of fanciers. Mr. Jas. Sheppard will officiate as judge. There will also be a table show of British birds, respecting which schedules have been sent out to all members; if any have been overlooked will they kindly apply to me for one? Any member who is unable to pay his subscription according to rule, but who would like to enter a few birds at the Nest Feather show, should communicate with me, when matters will be put right.

A Reader of CAGE BIRDS, I have been considerably helped both in breeding Canaries and making cages, writes Mr. F. Whiting (Bungay). I have used some of the "Illustrated Ideas" with great advantage.

"Cage Birds" Charts.

Number nine of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS is now in course of preparation. We anticipate it will prove one of the best of this interesting series, and fanciers should not on any account miss it.

The Essay Competition.

A very large number of voting papers has reached us in connection with the deciding of the destination of the chief prize in our recent essay competition. These will be carefully scrutinised, and the result announced at the earliest possible moment—we hope in our next issue.

Federation of London Societies.

A meeting of delegates, writes Mr. J. W. Rennie, will be held at the "Raglan," Aldersgate Street, at 7.30 p.m., on Tuesday, June 16th. Representatives of all societies are invited, which representation, it should be understood, does not in any way pledge the societies to federate.

Northern British Bird M. & F.B.C.

Will all secretaries of societies desirous of having the patronage of the Northern British Bird M. and F.B.C. please make application before July 15th, when all patronages will be given out to those fixtures which meet with the approval of the club's members.—J. R. SLACK, hon. sec., 115, Stanhope Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The Latest Handbook.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS.

By C. P. ARTHUR.

(with additional notes by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., and W. Laskey).

The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockatecls is recognized as one of the most profitable and pleasure giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. In this thoroughly practical handbook an eminent authority and highly successful breeder of these two species gives very full details upon

How to Keep, Feed, Breed, Tame and Teach to Talk.

A handbook which should be on every bird-lover's book shelf. Two full-page illustrations.

TYSON v. CARL.

At the request of many friends we have decided to publish in booklet form a verbatim report of the case Tyson v. Carl—the recent lawsuit in which the question: What Is A Headline? was thrashed out. This account is a transcript of the shorthand notes of the hearing supplied by an independent reporter on the staff of the London News Agency, who vouches for its accuracy in every detail. The evidence makes a bulky little volume of 51 pages, and we will send a copy post free to any interested reader on receipt of three penny stamps.

BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1908 SEASON.

Harrogate C.B.S.

The breeding operations round here are, generally speaking, very good, some fanciers having from 30 to 60 young birds on the sticks, others having from 12 upwards. I have visited a few of our local bird-rooms and have seen several promising young birds. I wish all fanciers the best of luck, and trust this season may be a far better season than last, both for quantity and quality.—GEO. HY. BARNWELL, hon. sec. Harrogate C.B.S.

I am doing well with young birds this season. I have at present 44 on the sticks and 29 in nest, and this notwithstanding the changeableness of the weather.—P. MORRIS (Ryde).

Secretaries and Fanciers are invited to send their experiences.

In the Cuckoo's Favour.

Daily we hear the call of the Cuckoo and occasionally we get a glimpse of the big Hawk-like bird hurrying across the meadow, or through the elms. However much we may dislike his parasitic habits and feel aggrieved at his greedy offspring for ousting the tiny Warblers from their rightful home, we cannot but admire one point about him: he is a greedy destroyer of insect life, of big, ugly caterpillars, and nasty creeping things, that it almost makes one shudder to look at.

The Lust to Kill.

The other day a Lesser Grebe was delighting a crowd by the Dee Mills by its diving powers, when, according to the "Chester Chronicle," two or three hooligans in a boat armed with staves and stones arrived, and chivied it up and down for an hour endeavouring to kill it. A Larger Grebe, too, was diving in the river by the Boughton Fords when a man came along with a double-barrelled gun and fired two shots at it, and slew it with the second.

Foreign Bird Lovers, Note!

Lovers of foreign birds, and especially those interested in the Budgerigar and Cockateel and their breeding, should send a sixpenny postal order at once for a copy of our latest handbook, which gives the fullest details of how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach to talk. It is written by Mr. C. P. Arthur, one of our oldest and best-known breeders of those two species, and has two full-page illustrations. In this handbook the beginner will discover all the information he can possibly desire to possess, while the "old hand" will find it contains many "tips" not to be found in any other book on the subject. Send a postal order for sixpence to the Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

The Song of the Blackcap.

Tall hedgerows where the wild clematis and roses ramble, or by the edge of some cool copse, are the favourite resorts of the Blackcaps, and one may hear his song some time before detecting the singer. It is a mellow warble, rather loud, and somewhat disjointed, described by many to be equal to that of the Nightingale. This is high praise, and, I fear, rather too flattering, although a good one in full throat is certainly a charming songster. Old Gilbert White thought highly of the Blackcap, and mentions the bird's vocal powers more than once. In one letter he remarks: The note of the former (Blackcap) has such a wild sweetness that it always brings to my mind those lines in a song in "As You Like It":

"And tune his merry note
Unto the wild bird's throat."

Feeding the Hungry Brood.

The bright sunshine and warm rains have brought forth a plentiful crop of buttercups and daisies among the tall grass. The mother birds with a view to safety take the young broods out in the meadows to feed and teach them to find food for themselves, breaking a worm up in front of them, and by example encouraging them to help themselves. The clumsy young ones keep close to the parents, constantly clamouring for food. Although insect life is plentiful just now, the old birds must have a weary time of it; a summer's day is a long one, and there can be no rest when a healthy brood has to be attended to. And in many cases the duty is carried on by the male bird alone, while his partner is incubating the second clutch. These little family gatherings are plentiful everywhere just now.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems), will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds." 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE. Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mules and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Parks and Lake Aviculture—Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. M.B.O.U., &c. Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

A Bird which Does Not Sing.

Cornish P.C.—Your letter does not give enough particulars for me to tell what may be the cause of the bird's not singing for the last three months. I can only reply in a general way. Get your friend to treat the bird as follows, and if this does not soon bring it in song again, write again in a month and give more details as to how it has been treated. First see that its cage is quite free from red-mites, and the bird not exposed to any chills or draughts. Feed on a staple diet of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and twice a week give a few grains of hemp, and twice a week on different days a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake. Give a spray of green-food daily, and allow it to bathe every day if it likes. Keep cage floor clean, and strewn with a nice gritty sand from which the bird can pick particles for use in the gizzard. In drinking water give every second day for a week as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, ten drops of glycerine, and twenty of whiskey, shaken well together. After first week give alternately first day twelve drops of chemical food, next day five drops of tincture of steel, and pure water on the third day. Repeat over again in this order for a fortnight.

About Eggs.

F.J.C.—1 No, fortunately egg-eating hens are not very common among Canaries. I do not think there is any cure for it, though some fanciers appear to think that if a china egg is put in the nest of these hens they will tire of making fruitless attempts to break it, and leave the good eggs alone thenceforth from sheer disgust. Others again believe in blowing out the contents of an egg, refilling with a creamy mixture of nauseous substances, sealing the hole, and give it to the hen to investigate. By far the best plan is to fix up a nest box in which the egg rolls out of sight and reach as soon as it is laid, and then giving them to a more trusty foster parent to hatch and rear. About a week is the limit of time Canaries' eggs should be kept before being set. If it can be avoided they should not be kept longer than four days. Keep them in a small box buried in bran or seal in a cool—not cold—place, and turn the box over night and morning.

Breeding-Cages and Aviary.

"A Reader."—The extra door is. I presume, to facilitate inspection of the nest, so whether it is placed in corner of wire front or to open in the end of cage is immaterial so long as the object is gained. But, personally, I think one door is quite enough in any single breeding cage. The less a nest is inspected and interfered with the better, as a rule, and all that it is really necessary to do can be done quite easily by means of the usual door. There is one objection to the door in the end of the cage; if you have a number of cages placed side by side in tiers you cannot get at the door without disturbing cage. Forty-five to fifty degrees is quite warm enough during winter months. In early spring, if you are going to mate up the birds the temperature should be increased to sixty, and maintained very near that day and night. The best means of heating aviary would be by hot-water pipes with the boiler and furnace outside room, so that no fumes of combustion could escape into room. Failing this an oil stove would be the most convenient for you, but the risk is great, and I would, myself, rather take the risk of keeping the birds without heat at all. There are special stoves and kinds of apparatus sold for warming bird-rooms, but they all require a local source of heat. The portable hot-water coil, for example, requires a gas jet to heat it. The situation of aviary is altogether most unsuitable; it would be almost courting failure. Lime-washing the walls would be the best way of cleansing them, and fumigation would be most advisable. For other particulars on cleaning read up "Novices' Notebook" page at beginning of last February. Treat hen the same as advised in second part of reply to "Raddite."

Laying Shell-less Eggs.

R.S.V.P.—Your hen Canary is probably in an over-fed condition, which would account for her dallying about with nest-building so long as well as her laying the soft egg. Give them two days in three for a week as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, limiting the diet meanwhile to plain Canary seed and plenty of green-food. Then begin to give half a teaspoonful each of hemp and of inga every second day, and a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with six drops of sherry mixed in it, and sprinkled over with gold of pleasure seed, three times a week. Give these on different days, and alternate them so that a different item is given every day. Also add a fourth part of rape to the staple seed diet, and give three leaves of dandelion daily. After the first week give in the water four drops of tincture of steel every third day, and on each of the remaining days, for a fortnight, twelve drops of chemical food.

The Sorrows of a Fancier.

"Raddite."—Canary breeding has its sorrows and trials as well as its joys; but do not be disheartened. 1. Your best course when the hen ceased feeding, the young being a week old, was to have looked around for another hen or two with small broods about the same age, and distributed these deserted youngsters amongst them to be reared. This would have done away with the necessity of hand-feeding. Ordinary egg-food made into moist paste will rear young quite well. Two or three times each day, when about to feed them, mix a little finely minced green-stuff into the quantity of food you are going to give them at that "feed." Be very careful that the food is quite sweet always. Feed them every hour at least from dawn to dusk. As long as they continue healthy they will "gape" quite freely for food as long as they require feeding. They should be able to feed themselves when about a month old. 2. You will not, I fear, do much good with the hen that builds but does not lay. Feed on a staple diet of two parts Canary to one part rape. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of hemp, and every day a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, adding to this one day a pinch of inga and the next a pinch of gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water give four drops of tincture of steel every second day for a week.

Appearances are Deceptive.

H.L.B.—I feel quite convinced red mites are at the root of the bird's trouble. Perhaps you have made the mistake of examining the bird's body for signs of insects, whereas the red-mite is distinctly a nocturnal creature, and harbours in any convenient crack, or joint, about the cage, or the wall on which the cage hangs, and only comes out of its shelter to prey upon the bird at night. Examine the cage, carefully probing any small crevice with a pin on to a sheet of white paper, and you will doubtless "unearth" something. If you find any white powdery substance adhering to the sides of any crack in the cage you may safely conclude that mites are close by. The remedy is to thoroughly overhaul and disinfect the cage. Your feeding is not quite correct. Give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape as a staple, once a week a pinch of inga, and half a teaspoonful of hemp. Twice a week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake. Stop giving bread and milk. In drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash every second day for a week. The following week give five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. A leaf of dandelion, or sprig of groundsel or chickweed should be given daily.

A Stiff Claw.

Cruikshank.—The prospects of curing your bird's stiff hind claw are rather remote, I think. The hot and cold bathing process is useless in your case. Hold it in fairly warm water for a minute or two, then gently rub in with the tips of the thumb and forefinger a little warm olive oil. Repeat every second or third day for a short time. Give rather small perches, of a round shape—just a little thicker than an ordinary lead pencil. If the bird finds much difficulty in "sticking on" when roosting at night, you may remove one each night and substitute another about twice the thickness and a little flattened on top, removing this again each morning and put in the thin one. Keep it with these perches until it has acquired a firm grip with the hind claw. It will be necessary to remove only one perch each night if you move that one on which the bird usually roosts.

Forty Winks and a Nod.

F.T.P.—Many birds take a short nod about midday when nothing is wrong with them, but no self-respecting Canary should cease singing and "go right off" as yours does. As you give no idea as to how the bird is fed. I can scarcely hazard a guess as to what is wrong with him. He may be going into an early moult, in which case a few tail or wing feathers should have been dropped by the time this appears. If so, you need only keep him quite free from chills and draughts; give a little egg-food or crushed sponge cake two or three times a week, a pinch of maw seed every second day, and twelve drops of chemical food in the water twice a week. If there are no signs of moulting, give first, for two or three days, in the water twenty drops of whiskey, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash well shaken together. After that give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week, and on the alternate days twelve drops of chemical food. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and twice a week give a small teaspoonful of egg-food or crushed sponge cake, once a week a pinch of hemp seed, and a spray of green-food daily. Add five drops of sherry each time to its egg-food until better. Examine cage carefully for red-mites, which may have something to do with bird's condition. See reply to "H.L.B." on this subject

Great Expectations.

W.M.—With apologies to the shades of Charles Dickens, I should add to this title. Alas! I fear your expectations regarding the future possession of some Canary Budgerigar Mules will be less fruitful than were those of the immortal Pip. Whew! mon; it's a rare novelty. But, seriously, it is rather uncommon for a Budgerigar to pay such attentions to Canaries and similar birds, and I would go farther and say I should consider it was a most risky alliance. Do not be surprised if you find your Canaries with broken limbs one of these days, or find the young Canaries, if any are hatched, thrown out of the nest. I say young Canaries advisedly, because the possibility of Mules is utterly hopeless, and if any young are hatched you may be sure the cock Canary had been paying attention to both hens without your knowledge.

Growth on Beak.

J. Leland-Robertson.—The growth you describe is almost certain to be a small tumour, though it would be a little too dogmatic to assert positively that it was so without seeing it. You might try just touching it with a camel-hair pencil dipped in tincture of iodine three or four times (at intervals) a week. Do not daub on any appreciable quantity—only just dab the moist brush on the spot a time or two If the growth increases in size to any extent, a veterinary surgeon would easily remove it if the bird is worth the operation, but I would not advise you to attempt any interference yourself in this line.

Crest in a Bad Way.

E.S., Baltimore.—The bird was undoubtedly exposed to a chill or draught to bring on its illness, which is an attack of acute inflammation. Am afraid reply may be too late, but, if not, place the bird in an equably warm, quiet place, perfectly free from draughts. Do not give the bath at present. Feed on a diet of plain Canary seed only, with a little of the food you mention daily in addition, making the latter crumbly moist, and mixing with it five drops of sherry. A small piece of bread and milk, or a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, would make a good substitute for the food named. Give a small spray of chickweed, or a tender young top of groundsel daily. In the drinking water for a few days give thirty drops of brandy, ten of glycerine, and five each of sweet spirits of nitre and oxymel of squills each day. Shake well together. When the breathing is relieved drop this medicine and give instead twenty drops of brandy, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus. Shake the vessel vigorously to well mix in the oil. Give this daily for a few days, then on alternate days, and gradually drop it altogether when the bird is quite recovered. Do not let it help to rear the forthcoming brood.

Appears Egg-bound.

Zam-buk.—Although you say the vent is swollen as though the bird was egg-bound, I have no hesitation in saying: don't treat it for the complaint. When a hen is really egg-bound it does not appear in good health, but very much the reverse. It would, in fact, very soon die if not relieved, and presents very evident signs of its misery. The swelling is either an accumulation of fat, or waste matter, due to constipation. The latter is the more probable cause. In either case adopt following: Mix together a small quantity of equal parts of syrup of buckthorn and glycerine, and give the bird one drop direct into the beak every second morning for a week, and each day between dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea in its drinking water. At end of week give it four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid in its water every third day for another week. If the bird is not quite recovered by that time repeat course. Whilst it is under this treatment feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape, and give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry in it twice a week. Give a spray of green-food daily, but no hemp seed. A single drop of lukewarm salad-oil dropped on the vent from the point of a knitting needle twice a week will also help to relieve it. Hold the bird in the hand a few moments whilst the oil is absorbed.

Brevities.

Not an Anti-eggite (M. Reil'y).—Your hen is evidently a disciple of the egg-feeding clan. See reply to "F.J.C." As your other hen is not addicted to this wretched habit, you cannot do better than try to get them going to nest at the same time and adopt the special form of nest-box mentioned, giving the eggs of the egg-eater to the other hen to hatch and rear. You might have seen a type of nest-box for egg-eating hen in CAGE BIRDS' "Illustrated Ideas" last week. This would help you to understand what is required, and to improvise a suitable contrivance.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Sexing Greenfinches, etc.

A.E.—You should find it a very simple matter to sex adult Greenfinches at this time of the year. The cock is quite a gorgeous coloured bird, compared with his mate, during the breeding season, for while she is, broadly speaking, mouse-coloured, with yellowish-green shading here and there, and very little yellow in the wing-flights, he is a rich grassy-green all over, with very conspicuous yellow edging to the flight and tail feathers. Some real good jonque cock Greenfinches might almost be said to be greenish-orange in colour, so rich and bright are they when in nuptial dress. Another certain sign of sex now is the song; a steady, well-caged, good conditioned cock Greenie ought to be singing hard. A cage 36 by 23 by 17 inches is only large enough for one breeding pair of British birds, or for one hybrid couple. If you turn any more into it, you will meet with certain failure.

Concerning the Management of Softbills.

Teaser.—1. I doubt if any treatment could have saved the hand-reared Nightingale which was sent you by rail, but which got delayed en route. I do not understand your other troubles. I have "Softbills" of all kinds in my bird-room, from Wrens, Chiffchaffs, and Wood Warblers, to Woodpeckers and Magpies, and including delicate Foreigners like Sugar-birds and Tanagers, yet I am not in the least bothered with constipation amongst the stock. Probably you make your food too "stodgy"—use too little vegetable ingredient. I never fail to add grated raw carrot, mashed potato, or finely-minced green-food to mine (one or the other, the first-named being the favourite). It is a mistake, too, to give too much meat meal and heavy biscuit to the very delicate species. In their case I add a good heaven of dried crumbled sponge cake (home-made) and best ants' eggs to the ordinary stock mixture, with a dash of Plasmon powder, or a liberal "helping" of minced hard-boiled egg, or flaked yolk of egg. An occasional dose of mild saline medicine is recognised as a good thing to give Softbills, and this is what your own birds want. Dissolve a teaspoonful of sulphate of soda in a pint of drinking water. 2. Briefly put, gentles are bred by exposing meat to the attentions of the meat-fly. After it is "blown," the eggs soon hatch and turn into gentles. Put a piece of raw meat (or a dead bird) in a sunny spot out of doors (out of the reach of cats, etc.), and you will soon see the result—maybe smell it, too. 3. Wasp cake is termed "cured" after it has been exposed to gentle heat (in an oven, for instance) until the "grubs" have been killed. In my opinion the less "curing" it receives, the better. To keep for any length of time, it requires "curing" thoroughly; then, before giving the grubs to the birds I soak them in hot, sweetened water. 4. I think "black clock," or "house beetles" or "black beetles" (whichever you choose to call them) a very fine food for Softbills—the very small ones for small birds, and so on. 5. Earwigs could be "cured" like houseflies, by corking them in a bottle and baking them.

A Mixed Trio.

Miss C. D. F.—1. I do not think it is a cold your young Blackbird has got, but a touch of indigestion. You should certainly give moistened insectivorous mixture in addition to the grubs, worms, etc., and well stir amongst it a salt-spoonful of powdered cuttlefish, or a good pinch of gritty sand. Also put some finely-chopped green-food (or grated carrot or mashed cold boiled potato) amongst it. 2. Crests often turn out poor feeders, and many breeders of the variety keep a few reliable foster-mothers in their rooms. Two young Linnets ought not to be too many for any good feeding hen which has but two babies of her own. The majority of hens take no notice of "changelings," but many cases have been known where the latter have been thrown out of the nest, or left alone to starve. 3. If you mean that you have located and identified over 60 nests in one day's outing, I should say it is an excellent performance. If, however, by the word "got" you mean that you have taken over 60 nests in one day I certainly think (if you will pardon my plain speaking) it is not a performance one should feel proud of.

In the Sun.

Skylark.—It is detrimental to any bird, whether Skylark, Thrush, and the like, or Canary, to have the rays of the summer sun beating full upon its cage. It is astounding how thoughtless some owners of birds are in this matter. I have seen birds in such situations sitting with their beaks open, positively gasping for breath, yet their owners, maybe kindness itself to them in all other respects, let this sort of thing (unthinkingly, I trust) go on. In the winter, the early spring, and the late autumn, a sun bath is one of the finest things a bird can be given, but during sultry summer the shady wall is the one to choose as an abiding place for cages. That this is really the "flaming June" of the poets I am reminded as I sit writing these answers, sweating profusely, and with a bucket of iced water at hand. The feelings of any bird prisoned in a cage out in the blazing sunshine I can well imagine. Put your bird on the shaded wall, and he will sing all day, instead of, as now, only after the sun has got off his cage. Sunstroke and fits are likely to carry off birds of any kind which are subjected to the direct rays of the summer sun for a lengthy period.

Young Lark Ailing.

B. Clare.—Pity you did not refer to my query columns for the past two or three weeks, as the hand-rearing of young birds (Larks included) has been very fully dealt with. In issue for May 16th and May 23rd the feeding of Skylarks, and troubles incidental to their hand-rearing, were dealt with at great length. And, of course, I cannot occupy space by repeating the same information practically weekly. Your trouble results from wrong feeding. It is not possible for bread-crumbs and crushed hemp-seed to prove adequate substitutes for the insect food provided for the young birds by their parents when in a state of nature. These things are practically bound to rear weaklings, susceptible to attacks of cramp and other ailments. Even good dog biscuits (or puppy cakes) moistened with hot water would be far better, especially if a hard-boiled egg were finely minced up and mixed with every half-breakfastcupful of it. If your birds are still alive, change them on to the above, or some good insectivorous food advertised in our columns, mixed with hard-boiled egg and made moist (if you are still feeding by hand) with new milk. For details of feeding when adult, see issue of May 23rd. There is no need to put them out of doors until they are well feeding themselves. You will have to cage them separately then, or they will most likely fight—young birds of most species get quarrelsome and pugnacious.

Hand-rearing Chaffinches.

Weekly Reader.—You must have missed the issue for May 23rd, in which the information you now ask for was given. Here you are again, however. I don't believe in taking the youngsters from their parents at too early an age; let them show their feathers nicely before you remove them. The food to be used is the usual kind—that is, egg and biscuit. Crush two Osborne biscuits, and well mix with them the yolk and half the white of a hard-boiled egg, using a fork to do this with, one with thin prongs. When feeding take the required quantity of this mixture, and make it the consistency of thin paste (or of cream) with new milk. See that it is always sweet and free from the slightest taint of sourness. It must be made fresh at least once daily. Often I put in a good pinch of Plasmon powder, which I am never without in my bird-room. A few small cut-up pieces of mealworm may be dipped in milk and popped into their mouths pretty frequently; likewise any house flies you can capture should also be fed to them. As the youngsters grow, add a little soaked and just sprouting summer rape to the stock food. Steep the rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a towel before mixing it with the soft food. Gradually increase the quantity of this rape in the food. When they begin to pick up for themselves, wean them on to soaked rape, maw, light'y cracked Canary and hemp seeds, hulled and broken up sunflower seed kernels, seeding chickweed, shepherd's-purse, and groundsel tops. I have had them pick up ants' eggs with relish (especially live ants' eggs); in fact, I often mix some amongst the food I hand-feed with. You should look up recent back numbers; also see another reply this week.

Hand-rearing Blackbirds.

Willie.—It really is astonishing how few readers seem to carry out the editorial request to look over back numbers ere sending in questions. The hand-rearing of Thrushes, etc., has been very fully dealt with in our issues of the last few weeks, and to which you should refer. Here, however, is the information in brief:—Take the young when about ten to twelve days old—nest and all, if possible—and keep them cosy, say inside a wicker basket and on a bed of hay. At night throw a piece of flannel over the basket; keep it on during the day if cold. Feed every hour at first; about every two hours later on. For food, crush two Osborne biscuits and beat the yolk and half the white of a hard-boiled egg up in a teacup with a fork. Then mix the biscuit with the egg, and beat up very finely, and make it of a rather sloppy consistency with new milk when you are feeding it to the youngsters. It is a good plan to add a dessertspoonful of best quality ants' eggs, free from bits of rubbish. Always be perfectly sure it is fresh and sweet; it should be prepared fresh twice daily, if possible, during very sultry weather. A small flat piece of wood, with a suitably-shaped blunt end can be used to feed with; or a large blunted toothpick. As the youngsters get older, cut small mealworms in halves, dip them in milk, and pop them into their mouths; also any flies, smooth caterpillars, small grubs, etc., you can capture. Likewise add a little finely minced lettuce, or grated raw carrot. It is quite a simple task to hand-rear Thrushes. The chief thing is to feed very often, and to give only a very little at a time. Keep the nestlings and their surroundings scrupulously clean, or they will not thrive. Occasionally mix a little small but gritty (not dusty) sand with the food, or a little powdered cuttlefish. See another reply re the Chaffinches. Your seed samples I incautiously left lying about my desk at the office, and the mice ate them up. Could you post two more?

No Mules Yet.

P. A. D.—Your feeding is certainly not correct according to my own ideas on the subject. To be fed on "pure canary," even on alternate days, is enough to sour the disposition, I should think, of the nicest Goldfinch that ever lived. I quite think your method of feeding is, in fact, the cause of your non-success. Still, you have time yet to breed your longed-for Mules. The couple should have a teaspoonful of egg-bread every day; freshly made; if the Goldie eats any it will not hurt him. The seed mixture should be: Canary two parts, teazle and hemp, one part each, summer rape half a part. In addition, make up these two mixtures, (1) niger two parts, maw one part, (2) thistle, dandelion and sesame seeds in equal parts. Give a heaping teaspoonful of these on alternate days (No. 1 one day, 2 the next). Then you must go out and gather plenty of seeding dandelion heads, and the young leaves (you can give flowering heads and washed root, too, if you like), also seeding chickweed, shepherd's purse and groundsel. These wild seeding plants (dandelion in particular) are simply invaluable for bringing all Finches into proper breeding condition, and the hen Canaries as well. When you separate the Goldie from the hen (when she commences to sit) let him have the usual Finch stock mixture again. The hen should then have plain canary seed only in the hopper but give her a tiny pinch of maw and summer rape now and again, just to "cheer her up"; mine get a sprig of seeding shepherd's purse or chickweed, too, occasionally. When the young hatch, I give my hens egg and bisenit, with canary, summer rape and crushed hemp seeds in plenty, and a little maw, and soaked (just sprouting) rape for variety. When three or four days old, I give the hen a feed of the seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed, and as the youngsters progress I increase the latter two items until I am giving them practically ad libitum; they are the grandest "green foods" one can possibly give to feeding hens.

Death of Siskin.

F. P. A. Maclean.—It is, of course, only possible to guess at the cause of the death of your bird; only a post-mortem examination could reveal that with any certainty. I should say it suffered from some obstruction in the crop, or passages leading therefrom. "Asthma," or bronchitis, would not terminate in so speedy a demise. If my surmise is correct, then treatment was hardly likely to avail anything. I never give potato raw to my birds, so can say nothing about it from personal experience. I know that it is excellent for them when cooked, however. I do not see how it could possibly be "poison" to small birds, when given raw, as you say the "big fancier" told you it was. Perhaps some reader of these answers can tell us whether they have ever given raw potato to small seed-eaters, and with what result. Lump sugar is not directly harmful, but is quite unnecessary, and not beneficial, a piece of cuttlefish being very much the best thing. If you wash the perches and drawboard with scalding soap suds, that will be quite sufficient, I am sure, to render the cage quite safe for use with another bird.

The Red-backed Shrike.

P. B.—Yes; the Red-backed Shrike (or Butcher bird), can certainly be caged. I am not quite sure, from the wording of your query, whether or no you want information on hand-feeding a young bird. If so, I may refer you to the reply to "Willie" this week, as egg and biscuit is correct for this, though as the bird grows big a little of a really good insectivorous food should be mixed in. The Shrikes may be said to be purely insectivorous; that is to say, they do not eat seed. The Red-back should have a very large box-pattern cage. See the perches are of suitable size, and a nail should project through one, at back of cage, on which it will impale its food and tear it to pieces. Sand, containing plenty of coarse grit should certainly be supplied; though this is better given in a large tin placed inside the cage, as I think peat-moss litter (teased out a bit, if necessary) is the most suitable covering for the floor of its house-cage. Still, a very thick layer of sand is excellent. For food they require a good insectivorous mixture—game meal (without grit) or "Melox" would answer admirably as the basis—moistened with grated raw carrot, or mashed cold boiled potato, or finely minced green food, etc. The proportions would be, game meal, four parts; meat meal, dried flies, and ground silkworm pupae, one part each; and as good a sprinkling of ants' eggs as you can afford to put in. The latter, of course, are a more or less expensive item. Finely scraped or minced raw lean beef or mutton should be regularly given, especially during the moult, also hard-boiled egg. Live ants' eggs are relished, likewise cockroaches ("black beetles"), mealworms, and most other insects (including bees), mice, and tiny birds. One of the best and safest animal foods you can give is rabbits' flesh, either cooked or raw. Young Sparrows and young mice are esteemed great delicacies, and you must remember that without food of this nature your bird will not thrive for long. The raw meat I find it is best to soak in cold water before offering, to wash out the blood, which is the thing which upsets birds, and brings on fits, etc.

Young Birds Dying Off.

X.Y.Z.—Your method of feeding certainly does not seem such as would be likely to kill off the young birds. It reads fairly good, in fact, though you would be well advised to give seeding chickweed and shepherd's purse instead of the green-foods you are at present using. The latter (both, indeed) generally has a lot of minute insect life about it, which is greatly relished by all birds, and materially helps in rearing the young. I imagine your illfortune arises out of the interference of other birds, a common trouble in an outdoor aviary with a mixed lot of inmates. Have you never noticed signs of this? A cock Yellowhammer, for instance, can make itself a terrible pest; I notice you have one in the place. Leave a dish of a good insectivorous food in the place.

Seeds for Goldfinches.

No. 2.—Whoever told you that maw seed is bad for Goldfinches is a crank (to put it mildly), and you should ignore his statement. If one took notice of the fads of such people, I can assure you there would soon be nothing left on which to feed the birds. I have used the seed freely myself for years, and few keep a greater number of Goldfinches. This is the seed mixture I am using at present for my own birds: teazle and hemp six parts each, Canary four parts, safflower and linseed one part each, summer rape and charlock a half-part each. In addition, I have two other mixtures, of which I give half a teaspoonful daily—one, one day, the other the next day, and so on. They are (1) niger two parts, maw one part; (2) thistle two parts, dandelion, sesame, and gold of pleasure one part each. All are mixed by measure. I also, of course, give the various wild seeds beloved by the Goldie.

Brevities.

Birds with Light Plumage (B.A.T.).—You are a lucky individual if you have bred one wing-marked and two clear Goldfinch Mules in the same nest. Do I think they are of any value, you ask? I should just think they are, if really Mules. But are you sure you have not made some mistake? Is it not possible for the hen to have had the eggs fertilised by a cock Canary? Further particulars would interest me, if you care to send them.

Linnet "Fierce" (Molesey).—I should say the "fierceness" of the Linnet is due to the hen Canary not being in breeding trim, and so annoying him by declining to respond to his advances. If you keep the wire partition between them until the hen shows signs of desiring to build, I think you may then withdraw it to find things run smoothly. If not, then you must try another of your Linnets.

Thrushes Not Singing (W.B.).—You cannot, of course, expect the Thrush to sing when has only just finished moulting; he will take a few weeks to recover. Why the other does not sing is more or less of a mystery. You do not give the name of the food you are using, but I should feel inclined to try a change. You should get a supply of "black beetles," and give a few daily; gentles you ought also to be able to obtain. Change the medicine you are giving, to 10 drops of tincture of gentian, in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, daily for 10 to 14 days.

Wild Seed (Hardbill).—My friend Mr. Boaler, of that well-known firm of seedsmen, Messrs. Carter and Company, is good enough to tell me that the chief seed in the mixture you send is corn marigold, while it also contains a good quantity of spurry.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

What Parrot?

J.M.—It is one of the species usually classed as Alexandrines; which, I am unable to say from the details you supply. The treatment for these and the Ring-neck group is similar, and is given in this column almost weekly. I have come across quite talented individuals, and, again, others whose articulation was very faulty, and it was difficult to interpret their utterance. However, I should say that if you keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and also teach it by the constant repetition of words and short phrases, it should ultimately, at any rate, speak a few words. To show to what an extent individual talent exists with Parrots, I may say I am intimately acquainted with three individuals of the same species, all equally tame, and in the hands of those who equally take pains with them—one is quite a talented talker, the other two utter not a word!

Amazon and General Mixture.

M.F.—I do not think you need trouble much about the bird's dietary at present. So long as the bread is plain, stale household, given dry, it will not hurt for a time to subsist on this; and the very fact of its having changed over from the maize should be sufficient indication that it will vary it again later. Keep a tin of the seed mixture continually in its cage, and apart from this let it have what bread it requires. I never yet came across the Parrot that could for long resist a shelled walnut. Do not give it unwholesome slops, table scraps, or anything of that sort for variety's sake. The seed mixture should consist of Canary seed, maize, wheat, dari, hemp, oats, and sunflower seeds in about equal parts. If you watch this column for a few weeks you will soon get an idea of correct diet treatment; it appears in full nearly every week. As regards talking, individual specimens vary considerably, but most Amazons make fair talkers, and if you follow the directions given in reply to "J.M." in this issue, your bird should soon improve in this respect.

Shama with Swelling.

F.L.C.—Am of opinion the swelling is a tumour, and that your bird is not suffering from ophthalmia. If so, the swelling must be lightly touched with tincture of iodide (use a camel-hair brush, and well cleanse for each occasion); care must be taken that the tincture does not enter the eye. If it should prove to be ophthalmia, then you must bathe the affected part with a solution of rose water and zinc (procure this from your chemist). In either instance, it will be necessary to handle the bird, however distressed it may be; there is no other way, and I advise your treating with the iodide for, say, 10 days, and note the result. If this should be practically nil, then after a couple of days try the zinc solution. The Shama is such a confiding bird that I'm rather surprised at its being so excessively distressed when handled, though I know even the tamest of birds which will eat from the hand do not care to be handled much. A bird I have had in my possession for several years, if it were not for London cats, would follow me round the garden like a dog. A mealworm will fetch it from anywhere, and with this bird, at any rate, it is a case of "familiarity breeding contempt." Shall be glad to hear of the bird's progress.

Prolific Seed-eaters.

W.S.—You have given me a "teaser." Even Canaries mostly require some kind of soft food to help them out; and, again, there are but few species of Foreigners that breed with the regularity of Canaries and Budgerigars under the same conditions. Zebra Finches and Cutthroats would be fairly reliable breeders, and fulfil all your conditions at remunerative prices. White Java Sparrows, once you get them to start, are fairly prolific, and the young should command from 7s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. a pair, according to purity of colour. Bengalese also are free breeders (one pair only in each cage), and the young should fetch from 6s. to 7s. 6d. a pair. Gouldian Finches would quite fill your hill, except as to quick and prolific breeding; in this respect they are very erratic. They have great beauty, and require only seed, green food, etc.; but the difficulty is to get them to start breeding. Longtailed Grassfinches are very pleasing birds, with the one reserve as in the case of Gouldian Finches; the same applies to Ruficauda Finches and many others. The only birds I should put down as quick and ready breeders are Zebra Finches (young worth 4s. 6d. or 5s. a pair), Cutthroats (young worth 4s. 6d. a pair), and White Javas, as above. Waxbills would meet your case, but they seldom breed in captivity, even in aviaries. The above is general experience, but I am of the opinion that if Foreigners were tested more in roomy cages, results would not be altogether disappointing. Regret I cannot be more definite.

Parrot with Sore Mouth.

F.A.—Glad to note there is an improvement. Give the bird a rest for a week, and then instead of the potassium of glycerine, use honey and borax in the same manner. You can get this in small boxes, ready mixed, from most chemists. If it picks out all the hemp, and does not touch the remainder of the mixture, do not give any more the next day, but simply sift from it any husks, etc. Make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food; this will be a tonic, and will have a slightly constipating effect. Once a week till the bird is in a better general condition give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia as per directions already given. It is very tiresome and trying getting a bird into condition again that has been mistreated for any lengthened period; however, two or three weeks should produce a marked improvement in your bird's condition.

Brevities.

What Bird? ("Curious").—In further reply re bird brought from Southern Russia, I cannot make your description fit anything but a Brambling in winter plumage, or possibly a female of the same species. Regret I am compelled to be so indefinite in my reply, but birds, even well-known ones, are often very difficult to identify from written descriptions.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Yellow Budgerigar (Miss Rowney).—Inflammation of liver and lungs, ending with apoplexy.

Young Canary (H. Harris).—Inflammation of liver and bowels through being fed on soft foods (probably containing animal fat), instead of being weaned on to seed at six weeks of age.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

A Pomeranian Purchase (Ladnek).—We are very much obliged to you for bringing this matter to our notice.

From "Ould Oireland" (C. Quinn).—We thank you for your kind remarks concerning ourselves. Such praise were enough to bring the blush to our modest cheeks.

Singing Contests (C. R. Ashmore).—There is no charge for inserting the results of singing contests. Advertisements of contests due to be held, however, are charged for at our usual prepaid rates.

Cutting (H. Slater).—Many thanks for your kindness.

Colour Feeding (C. Irvine).—Accept our thanks. We shall hope to publish the paper in the near future.

Memorandums (R. Southworth).—Pleased to know you are so highly satisfied with the memorandums we printed, and we thank you for the assurance that you will show them to your friends.

Standard Cage (H.J.F.).—Photograph duly received, for which accept our thanks.

Outdoor Aviary (Tee Gee Reeves).—We are afraid the subject is too wide a one to be dealt with in our correspondence columns. You will find many photographs and designs of outdoor aviaries, with details of construction, in Mr. Norman's book, "Aviaries, Birdrooms, and Cages," which we can send you post free for 2/3. In the current volume, too, several articles, accompanied by illustrations, have appeared.

No Answer (Grimston).—We cannot see that any good purpose would be served by the publication of your letter, for we are ourselves always impressing on readers the advisability of adopting the deposit system when dealing with strangers. If you will conform to Rule 8 we shall be pleased to do what we can for you.

Essay Competition (H. C. Brooks).—1. Pleased to know you agree with the decision in your section. You take a somewhat technical view of the word, we think; you must not, too, overlook the fact that we were in the hands of the judges. 2. The last sentence partly answers this query. If you feel sufficiently interested to pen a letter touching upon the doubtful (in your opinion) points, we shall be most pleased to print it. Friendly discussion is always welcome.

HOUSE'S
CANARY MANUAL
Price ONE SHILLING. Post Free 1/2.
Superbly illustrated by the Champion Canary Artist Mr. H. NORMAN. EVERY BIRD DEPICTED IS A VERITABLE MODEL, and shows the breeder what to aim for. Some idea of the popularity of this Practical Manual may be gathered from the fact that under the title of "The British Canary," it has passed its Third Edition, entering upon a Fourth Edition of 5,000 copies under the new title of "House's Canary Manual." MR. HOUSE has thoroughly revised and brought this work up-to-date and incorporated a chapter on the "Roller or Singing Canary."
F. CARL, 154, Fleet St., London, EC.

A COLUMN FOR FANCIERS.

Appended are brief particulars of some of "Cage Birds" SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS for keepers and lovers of birds, with post free prices.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1
By W. Geo. Cresswell, M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

"SEPTIC FEVER OR CANARY PLAGUE." - 7d.
By R. H. Clarke, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

"THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY." 1½d
By J. H. Payne.
A Lecture reprinted from Cage Birds, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the birdroom. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-.
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout posteards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-.
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of Cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular), Norwich (Yellow) Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests, Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

FANCIERS' PRINTING.
Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROPOSED NEW SOCIETY FOR NEW TREDEGAR & DISTRICT.

SIR,—I am trying to form a cage bird society for New Tredegar and District, and am calling a meeting at the "Crown and Sceptre" Hotel, New Tredegar, on Wednesday, June 10, at 7.30 p.m. All interested in the hobby are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

R. G. DAVID, Sec. pro. tem.

A POINT CONCERNING MULE-BREEDING.

SIR,—In reply to "E. Milne"; if he will kindly refer to my essay he will find that that I did not state "that there is no use taking a nest of Canaries from a hen before introducing the Finch, when that hen is young and healthy." What I did write was this: "Some breeders take a nest of Canaries off each hen before putting her up for Muling, although this is not necessary if the hen is young and healthy." By which I meant that if a fancier was desirous of breeding Mules for the first round, he could do so, and naturally he would stand a better chance of success if he used a healthy young hen.

J. W. DICKSON.

THRUSHES AND THE CASTING OF "SHIN BONES."

SIR,—A workmate of mine has a Thrush whose legs have become twice as large as they ought to be, and when he asked my opinion I showed him some correspondence on the same subject which appeared in your valuable paper, notably Dec. 1st, 1906. He said his was a similar case to that recorded in that issue. So I went and saw it, and if British birds in confinement do cast their shin bones this is an undoubted example, for there are perfect legs formed behind the old shin bones which are gradually coming away at bottom of legs. Whether he will eventually cast them alright or not will be seen later; at any rate, I will let you know the result. The Thrush at present is in perfect health and singing as if there were nothing the matter with it. But it has a job to grasp the perch: he cannot stand up as he should, but crouches on it instead. If any fancier would like to see this bird he can do so by calling at No. 16, Parrett Buildings, Bristol Road, Bridgwater, where Mr. Merrick would be very pleased to show it to him.

THE NIGHTINGALE AS A CAGE PET.

SIR,—The Nightingale is considered by all authorities to be the best of our songsters, and during the latter part of April and the beginning of May its song can be heard in most copses, hedgerows and garden and pleasure grounds in this district (Hunts) during the evenings. It is very rarely that two are heard close together, as the males, who arrive some 10 or 14 days before the females, generally come back to the same spot to breed in, that they occupied the previous year, and many a battle is no doubt fought between the old and young to see which has to leave the place. Whether they ever kill one another in battle I am not able to say, but many a time I have seen them chasing one another about. This bird has always been a great favourite of mine as a cage bird, but of late years I have not kept one. I am, however, still in hopes of having another good 'gale or two if health will permit of my looking after them. These birds I have had just after their arrival; I have also had some hand-reared ones and some that have been caught during August. The first one I had was caught in a greenhouse on its arrival to our shores; the weather had been cold and it flew in there to get under shelter. Before I had had the bird three days it commenced to sing. I fed chiefly on cockroaches and crickets, yolk of egg, and some flies and spiders until I could get it on the soft food. I believe I kept this bird for 8 years or so, before it died in a fit. The best way is to get a nest and hand-rear them, and when they can do for themselves put them singly in good-sized cages. There are generally a good many nests found about here, but as a rule they fall an easy prey to the boys who are nesting. This is especially the case with those nearest the town; several nests I knew last season were taken in this way and the eggs were wilfully destroyed, the boys throwing them at one another for mischief's sake. After the first month or so the boys soon get tired of nesting, and then most of the birds get a chance for their second broods. The nest of the 'gale is not a very elegant affair, and consists of twigs, roots, leaves, fibres and grasses; some birds use a little hair for the lining. The eggs are generally five in number and are well known to most boys by the dark colour—a kind of nut-brown of a greenish tinge. The Nightingale's natural food consists of moths, flies, beetles, spiders, small green caterpillars and larvæ. Although it eats fruit it is not so fond of it as either the Blackcap or the Whitethroat. After you have hand-reared young 'gales they can be kept on any good kind of soft food with plenty of fresh egg, minced fine and mixed with it, varying it with plenty of live food, such as moths, spiders, flies, butterflies, beetles and mealworms. I am greatly in favour of the young (taken from the first nest) being hand-reared; they generally make the best singers and manage to get through their moult quicker. One I had soon learnt some of the Canaries' notes which it used to bring out with its own. Every season I used to put this bird into a box cage hung upon a high garden wall so that it might hear the wild 'gales singing; this would, I knew, bring it into full song at once. I have also seen one of the wild ones go to the cage and try and fight the bird through the wires. The cage was hung not twenty yards from where my bird was hatched. If done well, and provided they can get (during the summer in particular) plenty of live food, they will live in cages for years. My birds were all particularly fond of cockroaches given alive. They would go for them at once and seemed to relish them very much. The hand-rearing of these birds is the same as in the case of most insectivorous ones, but I think they are the easiest of the lot, as their mouths are larger and the youngsters take the food better. I gave plenty of boiled egg, both yolk and white, being a great believer in it, and I found it gave them most stamina when under artificial treatment. I also gave plenty of green flies and ants' cocoons with a small quantity of ground dog biscuit, made into a nice paste so that it would easily slip down their throats. They should be fed every two hours when being hand-reared. As the hens are not of much use, after I was able to sex them I always gave them their liberty, for it is a great pity to keep these birds if one does not want them; in fact, no insectivorous hens are worth keeping, and for humanity's sake it is best to give them their freedom. I hope, Sir, these few remarks may be the means of saving many a caged 'gale's life both in infancy and when fully moulted.

A LOVER OF THE BIRD.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

SIR,—Mr. Jeffrey's experiences with Nightingales would doubtless be very instructive to many, but personally I should be glad if he will kindly leave a few to breed in the open, if possible, this season, so that we, further north, may have a chance of hearing them sing in their season at some future period. I am convinced that if Mr. Jeffrey (and others) will not be altogether selfish in such matters, by attempting to capture all of them, they, the birds, may yet extend their habitat and "turn up" in the woods and groves here waiting for them year by year, and where we shall allow them to breed undisturbed as much as possible. I hope if ever they do get as far!

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—Do wild birds feed their young on dandelion? is a question which appears in a contribution on the merits or otherwise of dandelion by Mr. Clegg. I know for a fact that the first brood of young of wild seed-eaters such as Greenfinches, Linnets, Redpolls, Chaffinches, Twites, etc., are reared almost entirely on the seeding heads of dandelion. Of course, there are not any dandelion heads for the second broods of seedeaters, as the plant only blooms in the spring; but there is an abundance of green fly, small caterpillars, and seeding heads of dozens of other varieties of wild plants. But for the first broods dandelion heads are almost the sole food for feeding young with. Wild birds don't eat the leaves of dandelion in a wild state (at least, not to any exent), while they have the choice of both leaves and seeding heads; but, then, neither will Canaries which have been used to having the heads. Very few Canaries that are kept in cages will touch dandelion heads, unless they have been "educated" up to it when young; but, in an outdoor aviary, they will reject anything and everything in favour of dandelion heads, not excepting egg-food, and will feed their young almost entirely on them if kept supplied two or three times a day. There seems to be a difference of opinion with regard to the effects of dandelion on young Canaries; if the right sort of dandelion is used—i.e., nice young leaves grown in the open field (not in the shade or under trees, which is generally "rank," or "lush," as Mr. St. John has it), no harm will come from the use of it. I have often wondered if the fanciers who dont like dandelion, and who decry its value most, are those who live in large towns. If it is so, it is perhaps a question of "sour grapes." No one can prove it for certain that dandelion, if the right sort was used, ever harmed or killed young Canaries. I think they must look to something else for the cause.

TEMPUS OMNIA REVELAT.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—Your correspondent's letter signed "One Who Knows" really amused me. Just fancy; one who knows, yet afraid of being known; he also says I surprised him. Well, it's not the first time he has been surprised. Now, Sir, he says that at our general meeting we wanted to withdraw from the C.B.U. when, as a matter of fact, there was nothing mentioned about it. It was at our matched pair show that it was brought up, when someone suggested that we should obtain a license, as it would be cheaper; but we were informed that we could not be sure of getting one if we left it till then, as the C.B.U. would not grant one if we clashed with another show. Now, knowing that, under present conditions, it would be of no use our holding a show unless under the C.B.U. rules, I proposed that we become affiliated to the C.B.U., as without them no affiliated member would be allowed to show. Perhaps this know-all person will inform us what is the good of belonging to the C.B.U., as no one else seems to be able to do so; also why he failed to explain to us the good of it at our last meeting when it was under discussion? Now, Weston-super-Mare and our own show are not the only ones that clash. If he looks in the "show dates fixed" column of CAGE BIRDS, your correspondent will find that there are one or two more in the same fix.

T. KEEGAN.

SIR,—As Weston-super-Mare show has been brought into such prominence in this matter I think it only right I should give you a true version of the affair. In fixing our show date we took great care not to clash with any show near us, and seeing a small note in CAGE BIRDS to the effect that the Bristol C.B.S.'s date was fixed for (if I remember rightly) the same date as Torbay, we fixed up 22nd October. I then registered the date with the C.B.U., and shortly after signed the penning tender. Judge of my surprise on seeing in a later issue that the Bristol date was 22nd and 23rd October. I immediately wrote the C.B.U. secretary pointing out that as our date was fixed first we were entitled to stick to it. The reply was that he would make arrangements for Bristol to alter their date and after a great deal of correspondence on the matter, I attended a meeting of the Bristol Society and they decided not to alter their date. (Now, would it not have been better, so far as Torbay were concerned if Bristol had been allowed their original dates, as Bristol is quite 60 miles from Torbay, whereas Weston is only 20 miles?) Now, from what took place at that meeting it appeared to me nothing had been done except to engage the hall. Surely, this being a small item, the dates could have been then easily altered. The judges were not even selected, nor were any definite arrangements made with any specialist club, whereas poor W.-S.-M. had engaged their judge, signed their penning tender, and had all their printing well in hand. Still, we are only a small show, and may still thrive through it all, notwithstanding a £10 deficit last year. It is the genuine, small amateur that keeps the small shows going, and not the deck-sweepers. "One Who Knows'" letter was fine, and has weighed the matter up in the proper spirit. He evidently knows something of the inner working of the Bristol Society. After all, this confusion was caused through an oversight on the part of the secretary of the C.B.U., and it seems a pity that two shows will suffer for it. I trust Bristol and Weston may both have good shows.

GEO. W. READ,
Sec. of the Weston-super-Mare F.S.

SIR,—I notice the letters on the above subject are continuing week by week. What have the C.B.U. to say on the matter? Have they no answer to the charges of incompetency levelled against them? They evidently think it the best policy to sit tight and say "nowt." But let us give them time. Perhaps in a month or two, when the show season is about to commence, when the clubs that have affiliated have all sent their fees, they will descend from their lofty perch and favour us mere mortals with an insight into their business ways. Only last week I heard of the treatment meted out by the C.B.U. to a society in the Midlands, and also the reply of the society. The secretary of the said society sent its affiliation fee to the C.B.U. in February specifying a certain date for their show. The Union secretary replied stating he could not accept that date, as he did not know what date Nottingham would want. The society's reply (rightly so I consider) was to the effect that as they had sent their affiliation fee first they were entitled to that date and would have it, Cage Bird Union or no Cage Bird Union, and Nottingham notwithstanding. First come first served, and no favouritism, is evidently not the motto of the C.B.U. If the committee have found it a "white elephant," why not resign and re-construct the whole thing on sound business lines, managed by men with brains? I believe there are a few such men in our Fancy. If a guiding body is necessary (and I really believe it to be a very useful adjunct to the Fancy in cases of dispute, fraud, etc.), let it be looked after by men who know what they are doing. Brother fanciers, why do you allow the C.B.U. to humbug you in the manner they are doing? I say show where you like and when you like, and let the best man win.

C. P. SMITH.

[A Paragraph of the above letter has been deleted. It has always been our policy to allow correspondents the utmost latitude in expressing their views, but to indulge in cheap sneers at individuals is surely quite unnecessary and uncalled for.—EDITOR.]

SOME BREEDING EXPERIENCES.

SIR,—I started to pair up my birds at the end of March and had them all paired up by the end of the first week in April—i.e., 7 pairs of Yorkshires, 6 pairs of Norwich, and one pair of Borders. The Borders and a Cinnamon-ticked Yorkie went to nest first and gave me 5 full eggs in each nest, and each hatched five; but the snow came, and the Borders threw out their young, and I only saved one Yorkie by transferring it to a common hen. I had two nests of clear eggs and have had 28 young from the first round, and all the hens are sitting or nesting again. The Yorkshires started nesting much later than the Norwich, and nearly all have had full eggs and reared all except one, which I lost—which proves that it is wiser not to be in too great a hurry to pair them up. I have had none of the hens sick or eggbound, which I attribute to keeping the stock hens during the winter in large flight cages and feeding on plain seed, with apple and carrot on alternate days and a little niger seed twice a week; and last but not least, a liberal use of the bath. The show birds I keep in separate cages. I give them a little egg-food after their return from the show. I have turned all my foreign birds including my King Bird of Paradise, out into an aviary, and they look grand. I cover them up at night. I always look forward to Friday for the paper, CAGE BIRDS, and I find it most interesting and instructive.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR NOVICES.

SIR,—With a view to helping novices a bit I have written the following. I started last year to breed Canaries, but only bred three, together with four Goldfinch Mules out of eight hens and five cocks. Not becoming downhearted, I made another start this year. I had been reading CAGE BIRDS every week and had got some very good advice from it. I started with six hens and five cocks, which I paired up on March 26, and up to the present I have had hatched 19 young from first round and have reared nineteen young, all of which are now on the sticks and doing well. From the next round I had three young ones and four clear eggs; and four hens are sitting now on 17 eggs, all due to hatch next week. I feed the hens on egg-food made up of home-made bread, with egg and maw seed mixed. I put it in a pot at the bottom of the cage, with plenty of hemp and gold of pleasure seeds. I give them plenty of fresh dandelion, dandelion heads, and groundsel when they are feeding the young. I wish CAGE BIRDS all the success it deserves. NOVICE.

BIRD CATCHING.

SIR,—In reply to "Timmie" I should like to inform him that by "wire traps" is meant that the frames are of wire, except the netting with which it is covered. Ordinary thread netting is used. The great advantage of these traps is that they fold up into so small a compass; and no matter what happens to them they never get broken, and if they get bent they can easily be straightened again. If left set in fields they are liable to get trodden on by horses and cattle, but if they are it will not break them. In shape the nets are oval—i.e., like a long O. The front half turns back on the back half when set. They are stapled to trees or fastened to the ground by two pegs. They are driven with two springs—one each side. They should be made of nine or ten gauge wire when meant for catching Hawfinches in. Hawfinches should be baited with an open pod of green peas, Blackbirds with fruit or worms, Goldfinches with thistle heads, Bullfinches with privet berries or spray dock seed, Linnets and Greenfinches with spray of ketlock or turnip or mustard seed, Bramblefinches with beech-nuts and Nightingales with mealworms pinned on the cork.

STRAY NOTES ON HYBRID BREEDING.

SIR,—Since my last notes I have not much to record except disasters. The first nest seems to have been between a cock Goldfinch (caught early in the Autumn, but I believe not cage moulted) paired to a large Norwich hen. This pair went on well. The Canary made a good nest and laid five eggs, and after sitting upon them for nearly the full time, then gave up the ghost. This pair, I might say, was put up by quite a novice, after reading CAGE BIRDS, and the eggs were tested and found to be fertile. This was very hard lines for a young beginner. Another hen I know has had two nests of eggs which have been clear. I advised the owner to put some Linnet's eggs under her and let her bring the young up. This plan has often brought success at the next nest. There are plenty of Linnets' and Greenfinches' eggs to be got, hard sat on, and by using them hard sat on the hen does not have so long to sit. In years gone by I have found this scheme to answer well. The young brought up by the Canary, too, are valuable for another year's breeding. I am myself this year hand-raising Linnets, Greenfinches, Yellowhammers, Chaffinches, and Redstarts, and have been very successful with them so far. Others are doing the same. Greenfinches are now "catching on" about here, fanciers having just found out what good singers they make, especially if they can be brought up where there are any Canaries, so they can pick up some of their song. One young fancier's great favourite is the cock Redpoll, and he is using two or three this year, birds he has caught in a trap cage. I have one up with a hen Bully (both fresh caught this season). They are quite friendly, but have as yet given no sign of building. His pair (the Redpoll and hen Bully) both fresh caught this spring, are quite busy carrying building materials about. He has put in a Greenfinch's nest, which they seem to have taken to, so they may go on alright. From another pair a cock Greenfinch and hen Canary he now has some eggs. At first, although quite friendly, the Greenfinch would destroy the nest as fast as the Canary made it. He at last, under my suggestion, put in a Greenfinch's nest, which the Greenfinch apparently thought was alright and left alone. A simple thing like that often helps. Then the Canary sat for several days on no eggs. He fully expected she had some. Again, under my advice, he put two Greenfinch's eggs under her, and in three or four days she started to lay. The Greenfinch feeds her well, and is nearly always sitting in the nest beside her. The Redpoll-Bullie pair, of another friend, have been very amusing. The Redpoll has taken a great fancy to the Bullie and follows her about everywhere she goes. He has put in several nests for them, in boxes, but they generally get pulled to pieces during the first day they are in, the cock Redpoll being the culprit. At last she started to build on the cage bottom, in one corner. I advised him to put in a small flower pot half filled with sawdust and a Greenfinch's or Linnet's nest on the top of it. This he has done. The Bullie took to it at once and is continually on and off the nest. My idea of the sawdust was that if she laid and the nest was pulled to pieces, the eggs might be saved to put under Canaries. At any rate, he intends to take the eggs away, and put under Canaries, so as to make sure. Another pair, Greenfinch-Bullie, after several attempts and carrying materials about, but not building in the nest boxes or pans, has taken to a Greenfinch's nest, which he put in with two clear Greenfinch's eggs, so as to give her a start. I often find this a good plan (to place a nest with eggs in) to bring them on and half start them. One or the other will go continually and look in the nest, and make quite a fuss over them. Another pair he is trying is cock Yellowhammer and hen Canary. The Yellowhammer is quite a nice steady bird. They have made no sign yet. The Yellowhammer cross he intends next year to try in several ways, and so do I if I am successful in my hand-raising. Another pair I know of, cock Bullie and hen Chaffinch, have made no sign. The cock Bullie is a poor breeder in a cage, and this cross will take some getting. But I don't see why it should not come off. One wants an outdoor aviary for such crosses, particularly the Chaffinch and Bramblefinch cross.

T. H. KINCH.

A PUBLIC AVIARY FOR OLDHAM.

The Opening Ceremony.

SIR,—Just over twelve months ago one of the members of the Oldham and Dis. C.B.S. suggested at one of their meetings that it would be an instructive addition to the Alexandra Park if they could persuade the corporation to erect an aviary. Consequently, Messrs. Sharples, Ackroyd, and Winn were appointed to meet Messrs. Matthews, Stubbs, Taylor, and Cottam of the Oldham Natural History Society. At the joint meeting it was agreed that Messrs. Ackroyd and Stubbs seek an interview with the Parks Committee, which was granted, and they were successful in their pleadings.

The aviary has been built amidst a cluster of trees and presents a fine appearance. One drawback is that it is raised rather too high, thus giving less protection from the cold winds. The cost is approximately put down at £350. The structure is divided into six parts for the various species of birds, and is 35 feet in diameter.

Tuesday, May 26th, was the day appointed for the opening, and although the greater part of the day was spoiled by a heavy downpour of rain, "Old Sol" made his appearance, adding much to the enjoyment of the occasion. Councillor Ashworth presided, and after giving an account of the summer attractions, said the matter of the aviary had been before the committee for some time, and they felt that the attraction would be a great one. Mrs. Councillor C. E. Lees, who presented all the birds, said: "I open this aviary in the hope that the birds will be of great interest to the young of the town." Some people, she said, thought it was cruel to keep birds in captivity, and it was, of course, much nicer to see the birds flying about at liberty. But birds were capable of great affection towards human beings, being able to distinguish between one person and another, and knowing their owners from strangers. They had their likes and dislikes and showed them. She hoped they would be able to make those birds happy. They would be protected from hunger, although there were a large number of wild birds which died during a hard winter from hunger. She hoped they would live long, but as a rule the life of a bird was not very long. She urged the children present not to rob the eggs of the nests in the neighbourhood. She hoped it would be possible for some lessons to be given to them on birds and their habits, so that at Wakes week when they went into the country for their holidays they would be able to recognise some of them.

The following is the complete list of birds at present in stock and their sections:—

North Section: Mandarin, Carolina, Teal, Ruddy-shell, and Shield Ducks (in pairs); Shoveller, Purple Gallinules, and Sea Gulls (pairs); Australian Crested, Ring, Java (white), and Zebra Doves (pairs); Jay, Silver Pheasant (pair); and Peacocks (pair).

West Section: Bramblefinches, Bullfinches, Chaffinches, and Goldfinches; Red Poll, Green and Brown Linnets; Yellowhammers, Skylark, and Snow Bunting.

North-East Section: Lemon Crested and Rose Breasted Cockatoo, Red Rump, Moustache, Ring-neck, and Quaker Parrakeets; Rock and Pennent Parrots.

South Section: Budgerigars Green and Yellow; Red Bill, Grenadier, Half Mark, Madagascar, Napoleon, and Orange Weavers; Java Sparrows, grey and white; Cockatiels, and Californian Quails.

South-East Section: Saffron Finch; Cow Bird; Canary; Pekin Robin; Whydah; and Lady Amhurst's Pheasant.

South-West Section: Avadavats (green and red); Bengalese; Nuns (black-headed and tricolour); Combassou; Cutthroat Finch; Silver Bill; Zebra Finch; Wax Bills (St. Helena and Grey); Spice Bird; and Golden Pheasant.

The park superintendant, Mr. Barlow, had everything in ship-shape style, and his men kept the huge crowd in good order.—A. ACKROYD.

CORRECTION.

It having come to our knowledge that a great number of fanciers have an idea that is a paste or liquid compound, we wish to point out that this is not so. "Woodland Bird Milk" is in a Dry Powder form, and if kept in a cool dry place it will keep sweet for 6 to 9 months. It is not a food that birds will not touch, for they eat it readily, either in its dry state mixed with egg, or slightly moistened.

It is not necessary to use eggs with the food as it contains sufficient nourishment in itself. If it is used with eggs however it will mix readily, making a cooling instead of an overheating food.

A PATENT SEED CRUSHER.

SIR,—I notice in your columns, a Mr. T. B. Gray is enquiring respecting Wilson's seed-crushing machine. I have one in use that I should be pleased to show him if in my locality (Northampton), and which cost me five years ago 8s. 6d., or thereabouts (can't recollect the exact figure). At that time it was advertised in the columns of CAGE BIRDS, but since that season I have not seen the same advertisement. I can best describe it as a miniature mangle, as it works on the same principle, except for the grooved rollers which are fixed sideways and by means of screws can be adjusted to take any sized seed, so that you can either crack the husk to enable the youngsters to get at the kernel, or smash it. It is made principally of cast iron and can't get out of order, and is indeed a valuable adjunct to the bird-room. Hoping this description will be sufficient for your correspondent, and wishing CAGE BIRDS continued success. A REGULAR READER.

[We have examined our file, and find that in 1904 "Wilson's Patent Seed-crusher" was advertised by Mr. J. W. Wilson, 21, Albion Street, Earby, via Colne, Lancs.—EDITOR.]

BIRD-SLAYER WANTED AT REDCAR.

SIR,—I saw the enclosed paragraph in the "North Star" recently, and send it in the hope that you will reproduce it. The writer says:—In the garden of a well-known Redcar gentleman's residence, near the station, a Thrush built its nest just recently, and succeeded in bringing off five young birds. Several people knew of this nest, which the owner greatly prized, on account of it's being in his garden, and near the roadway. This last week-end some miscreant climbed along the wall and put a heavy stone in the nest, causing the death of the five young birds. The parent bird's grief was pitiful to see. Now, had anyone stolen the eggs, or even taken the birds away for rearing purposes, when they had grown older, their offence might have been looked over, but to wilfully kill these innocent, useful little songsters in this cruel, wanton manner is nothing short of a crime, and one that deserves to be punished with the old middle ages form of punishment. A touch of the rack would meet the case! Let the offender be dealt with by the local authorities, if he can be caught, and that will cure him. The owner states that the stone could not have found its way into the nest accidentally.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

THE Great Horton Good Intent O.S. had a real treat on Saturday evening last, the lecture by Mr. J. S. Clarkson (of Halifax) being of great interest throughout, and it was listened to very intently by the good company assembled. Mr. Clarkson's eldest son has had a few years in the pharmaceutical business, and therefore the lecturer has a good chance of obtaining information and assistance. A hearty vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. H. Chubb, seconded by Mr. Geo. Newell, and carried by all present, bringing to a close a very enjoyable evening.

BRADFORD City O.S. have a ramble on Saturday, June 13th, and intend taking train to Apperley Bridge Station and visiting the Esholt Hall Estate, afterwards wending towards Rawdon to tea, then round Rawdon Billing for home. All friends and fanciers will be welcome. These rambles are all the rage just now, and a pleasanter and more enjoyable way of spending a Saturday afternoon it would be hard to find.

IT is with regret that I mention the death of one of our keenest and best fanciers, Mr. T. Murgatroyd, better known as "Timmy," who has left this world under very distressing circumstances, and I am sure the family has the sympathy of his innumerable friends in the Fancy.

*A Domesticated Bullfinch.

Last year my father bought what was said to be a cock Bullfinch, but it turned out to be a hen. Quite recently he said I had better let her have her freedom, as the buds were plentiful. I did so one evening and felt sorry for it afterwards. But the next day when I came home from school I was pleased to find her back again in her cage. Since that time I have been in the habit of letting her out every day; she always returns in the evening.—Sent by J. Beeney (aged 12 years), 28, Belgrade Road, Hampton.

*A Parrot Frightens Thieves.

A gentleman living in Blackburn is the owner of a very clever Parrot. One evening the gentleman left his house secure, but on his return found the doors open. Those who had entered (would-be thieves) were evidently frightened away by the Parrot, which has a habit of greeting people with the cry, "Hello," uttered in a deep gruff voice, and following it up by a shrill whistle, and the remark: "There's the bobby coming."—Sent by A. Spink (aged 13 years), 29, Beechwood Road, West Hartlepool.

*A Thoughtful Little Chaffinch.

A friend of my father's found a Chaffinch which in the summer he hung out in the garden. It would call to the other birds with his merry "Pink, pink." One day in the winter the back-door was left open, and when the owner of the bird went in he saw a lot of other little birds in the kitchen picking up the seeds which the Chaffinch was throwing out to them from the cage.—Sent by James Allsopp (aged 9 years), 110, Molyneux Road, Kensington, Liverpool.

A Talented Starling.

We have a hand-reared Starling. He whistles "Half a pint of mild and bitter," and then says: "Mary, please be quick." He can say, "You are a pretty boy, ain't you," "Give us a kiss," "Come on, Dick," "Dear old boy," and he now whistles the first two lines of "God save the King." It was the advice on how to feed him that we had from CAGE BIRDS which saved his life when a baby.—F. CLAREE (age 10), 26, Coventry Street, Brighton.

The Treatment of Young Canaries.

By CLEM F. SAVAGE.

A Paper read before the members and friends of the Rugby and District C.B.S. on May 19.

Whoever embarks upon bird-keeping as a hobby will find scope for the exercise of patience, resourcefulness, and even ingenuity. There will be enemies to fight, obstacles to surmount, difficulties to circumvent. No matter how favourably situated may be the breeding-room, how robust the stock, how unremitting the attention or how unflagging the enthusiasm of the fancier, it must not be assumed that everything will go along as merrily as the proverbial marriage bells. Parent birds will give trouble; young birds will sometimes die (and often the most promising, or those we regard as such, are included in the number), but the mortality can often be kept within reasonable bounds, if only the right thing is done at the right time.

Three Causes of Annoyance.

To begin with, let me name and briefly touch upon, three causes of annoyance in the rearing of birds: 1, cold weather; 2, red mite; 3, refractory hens. This is by no means a full catalogue, but if in being "fore-warned" we can also be "fore armed" against even these, we shall have gained some ground

Probably the majority of us are ready to commence operations by the end of March or in the early days of April. What we hope for is a prolonged spell of nice, warm, sunny weather; but that, unfortunately, is precisely what we seldom get—at least, on this breezy tableland known by the name of Rugby. Not infrequently the wind veers to the north or the east at this season of the year; and, like the mother-in-law in the story, we discover it has "come to stay." Our birds are fit, nay, eager; we have completed our spring cleaning—all things are ready! What shall we do?

The Book says: "He that observeth the wind shall not sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." (Ecclesiastes xi. 4); and the fancier who keeps his birds apart until the weather is ideal for his purpose will probably have to wait a very long time. The elements during the month of May are frequently very treachcrous—now hot, now cold; whilst some of us are old enough to recollect sharp snaps, accompanied by snow, even in June.

Circumventing the Weather.

The wise man will take advantage of a bright day or two in April, or possibly a little earlier; and having judiciously paired his birds up will take some measures to guard against the chilly nights that must inevitably be experienced later on. Different men have different methods. My own plan, which I have found adequate, has been to hang a fairly thick curtain each evening when the temperature threatens to be low over the front of all my breeding cages. Formerly, I used large sheets of brown paper, which answered the purpose equally well, but in time got torn and ragged ,and were less convenient to handle than the curtain referred to.

This means, of course, that I must rise earlier in the morning than I might otherwise do, to remove the covering and attend to the birds, particularly if there happened to be young in the nest; but I am fully persuaded that by adopting this method, the Canaries are kept cosy and wake to resume their parental duties with greater zest than if they were left unprotected in an unheated room.

Of course, when the weather gets warmer the need for such measures disappears; but there is this to be said in favour of the fancier visiting his bird-room quite early in the morning—he will go with a quantity of freshly-prepared and thoroughly-sweet egg-food in all probability; and thus the young have the benefit of a wholesome breakfast, which may not always be the case if the meal has been prepared and placed in the cages the night previously.

War against the Red Mite.

Everlasting warfare must be waged against that mischievous little beast, the Red Mite, if success is to be attained in Canary-rearing and happy is the man who has learnt the secret of wholesale extermination. More young birds die through the ravages of Red Mite than the average fancier dreams of

One of my first wrinkles was given by a man who has since relinquished the hobby, but who at one time ran a fairly large stock of Canaries, chiefly Yorkshires. We were looking round his bird room one day, and he spoke after this fashion: "Last year I lost a great many young birds in the nest, and I have come to the conclusion that their deaths were due to the Red Mite. This season, when I set the hens, I well dusted the nest with insect powder, and have repeated the dusting a day or so before the eggs were due to hatch out, the outcome being that I have had much better luck."

This experience was related at a time when I was first beginning to get a few stock birds together, with the object of founding a stud, and I have never omitted to take advantage of the hint given. In fact, I go beyond the suggestion of my friend, and occasionally powder the young as well, though not after they open their eyes.

Already this season my second box of insect powder is in use, and probably in an advanced stage of exhaustion. Even where there are no visible traces of Red Mite, it surely is wise to act upon the principle that the potentialities of the pest may be present, lurking in ambush, and that unless care is exercised, they may with the advent of summer, develop into a formidable foe, able to "bring forth its pests in number," to indulge in a merciless night attack upon defenceless fledglings, and rendering matters so uncomfortable for the hen Canary that she forsakes her nest with its promising brood.

Even Young Birds may be Victims.

Even when young birds are safely on the sticks they may still suffer and die if the Red Mite is allowed to gain the ascendency. An acquaintance told me that one day he was paying one of those fraternal visits that some of us delight to indulge in, when the fancier on whom he had called complained of the difficulty he experienced in keeping Canaries alive when they reached the age of six or eight weeks. Many birds drop out of existence, as we know, when they approach, or are passing through the trying ordeal of the first moult.

"Are you troubled with Red Mite?" asked the visitor.—"No, I think not," was the reply.

But, as a matter of fact, the little enemy was there unto the third and fourth generation, and had to be dislodged by a liberal application of turpentine, which rendered the hiding-places unfit for habitation.

The mixture I use for dressing perch-ends, crevices, etc., is that recommended by Mr. Claude St. John in CAGE BIRDS—a pint of methylated spirits, in which has been dissolved an ounce of camphor.

Before leaving this subject, a word may be said for our industrious friend, the spider, to whom some people seem disposed to leave entirely the problem of how to get rid of the Red Mite; but whilst not recommending that course, I certainly do think we may regard the spider as an ally, and in doing our best to make the inside of the cages untenable for Red Mite, we need offer no serious objection to the spider hunting for and devouring as many as she can catch on the outside or in the immediate vicinity.

Perhaps She Will; Perhaps She Won't.

Who amongst us does not know something of the hen that is perverse, refusing to feed her young, or doing so only for a short period of time? What are we to do to make up for her deficiencies? It will be found a help to have a number of nests of eggs due to hatch out simultaneously, if this can be arranged; as then it is a fairly easy matter to transfer young from bad feeders to foster parents whose treatment is more considerate. Last season I had a chick from an egg laid by one hen, hatched out by a second, and reared by a third! This would not have been possible unless there had been several hens due to "come off" the nest about the same time.

A bath, in which a pinch of common table salt has been placed, is recommended as having a good tonic effect upon a "sweating" hen.

Frequently the cock plays a very useful part in the feeding of the young, and will assist the hen, or should she become neglectful, complete the task in her stead. Pairs of reliable feeders, kept solely for that purpose, are not to be despised, and no doubt every year many birds are reared by hand.

The Important Question of Diet.

No paper, professing to deal with the treatment of young Canaries, could be regarded as adequate without some reference to the all-important question of diet.

Egg-food is what my young Canaries are cradled upon, and I must confess to a decided bias in favour of crumbled home-made or Hovis bread, rathered than powdered biscuit, as a suitable substance with which to blend the shreaded volk of a hard-boiled egg. It is not my practice now to include the white of the egg, which, if it has any virtues, cannot be regarded as easily digestible, and I like the bread to be two or three days old.

Other points worthy of mention are: (1) To see that there is always a liberal supply of hemp seed in the breeding cage (I use a separate vessel for this), some hens consuming a great deal when feeding their young. (2) The grit should be frequently renewed, as it is evidently much in demand, not only for the formation of egg shells, but as an aid to digestion.

Green Meat.

A bird fancier who will not experiment can hardly be regarded as belonging to the "top hat link," as railway men would say. It is very valuable, and even necessary at times, to listen to advice from others, but, after all, nothing equals first-hand experience; and I have been wondering whether any amongst us have discarded the employment of green-meat entirely as food for young birds.

Some there are who use it plentifully, and apparently without evil results; but experts are agreed, I think, that there is an element of danger in providing young birds with quantities of green-stuff after they leave their parents and until they have emerged successfully from their first moult.

If it is risky to supply such food to vigorous Canaries of six or eight weeks old, does it not occur to you to be equally hazardous to use it when the birds are in an earlier (and consequently weaker stage of development? Does the fact that the salad has for a moment or two reposed in an older bird's crop make such a tremendous difference to its feeding value?

The temptation to provide green-meat to a slackening feeder is great, and who amongst us could resist it, if we believed that thereby a nest would be saved? But for my own part, I am this season using less green-food than formerly, and commencing some days later, and the results to date have justified the caution.

A Word for Milk Sop.

Now I will conclude with just a word in favour of milk sop as an aid to bridging over the period between the time the young leave the parental care and are able to crack hard, dry seed. This is generally an anxious time, and scrupulous cleanliness must be observed, lest in foraging on the cage floor the birds should pick up something harmful. But I have found the young take to sweet bread and milk kindly and thrive upon it, with a supplementary diet of crushed seed, the water being either withdrawn or made so distasteful (by the addition, say, of a few drops of a bitter tonic such as gentian), that they will not harm themselves by drinking large quanites of it.

An interesting discussion followed the reading of the paper.

HINTS ON THE BREEDING OF MULES AND HYBRIDS.

By THOMAS SMITH.

For smart, interesting breeding no branch of the Fancy can surpass "Hybrids." It is not every pair that is productive, but in lots of cases failure is because the birds are not properly treated.

The Need for Roomy Cages.

The average fancier seems to overlook the fact that British birds in their wild state enjoy immense space, and that it will not do for them to be confined in the small cages they are put into. If young are to be got, in a state of confinement British birds require to be put in large, roomy cages, so as to afford the inmates every opportunity of jumping and flying about; and there must be at least three perches—one high up,and the other two on a lower level.

This is particularly needed in the case of that favourite in Hybrid breeding—the Siberian Bullfinch hen. In good health she is very fond of jumping from perch to perch, and to be maintained in such health ample exercise of this kind is necessary.

One of the following makes a very suitable mate for her: A grassy-green, yellow, cock Canary, large, and of the Norwich type; a Siberian Goldfinch; a Redpoll; a rich-coloured, yellow Greenfinch.

When the Breeding Season Arrives.

Having selected a pair, they should be kept together for some months before the breeding season comes round. If they are in a place where artificial heat is in use, they may start breeding in March or April, but as a rule British birds in confinement do not commence to breed till the latter end of May.

When once the Bullfinch hen makes a start she lays cluteh after clutch, and keeps quite a number of foster mothers testing her eggs. The Canary of recent years has bred with the Bullfinch, a number having been successfully reared.

The Goldfinch-Bullfinch has been somewhat restricted during the last two years, but there is every prospect of its becoming a popular one this coming season, many fine pairs having been put up.

A Chance for Breeders.

The rara avis is the Redpoll-Bullfinch cross. It seems as if this most interesting cross had been abandoned; it is almost unknown to-day. It therefore affords a fine opportunity for breeders to persevere with the Redpoll, and produce a Hybrid that will be appreciated by exhibitors. A really good cross of this kind would at the present time command a very handsome price.

Goldfinch-Bullfinch crosses are not over-abundant, and there is scope here for the breeder. For this cross I strongly recommend a large, brilliant, Siberian cock Goldfinch and a large, Siberian Bullfinch hen. A breeder with a pair of this sort stands a chance of obtaining something after the stamp of the famous Edinburgh-bred Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrid, which was a great success on the show bench, attracting much admiring attention from visitors.

Nests for the Bullfinch Crosses.

The Greenfinch and the Siberian Bullfinch are the favourite pair, and had Siberian Bullfinches been more freely imported, this class would be greatly in evidence in aviaries all over the country. As it is, there are many pairs, and the competition will very likely be keen.

When they begin to nest the bottom of the cage should be covered with moss or fine grass. Some Bullfinch hens lay in the cup; but others drop their eggs from the perch, and unless the bottom is covered with something soft, breakages are sure to ensue. In any case the breeder should be early in the bird-room to remove the egg before it gets broken.

No time should be lost in setting the eggs when the complement is complete; if they are allowed to lie over for a time they are apt to become addled.

The young Hybrid is a strong, vigorous bird, and is easily reared under a good feeding pair. A couple of Hybrids in three succeeding nests is a fitting reward for the labour involved.

Breeding for Light Mules.

In my opinion the best way to breed for light Mules is to mate a large Yorkshire type of Canary—one that has been bred clear for several generations—with a hen Goldfinch, or better still with a piebald hen Goldfinch. With the latter there should be every chance of securing a light Mule.

We all know how valuable a large, light Mule is. It is hardy and "holds out" for many years. The Canary-Goldfinch Mule is a cage bird, let it be dark or light, and will always be in demand. As a songster it is valuable, and there is seldom any difficulty in disposing of it.

Some Other Fine Mules.

The Redpoll-Goldfinch is a cross which should have more attention devoted to it. Traits of both parents are most powerfully delineated. The Mule is clean and tidy and full of life. For a drawing room he is admirably suited. The Redpoll is often found there, but he is not nearly so attractive as the Redpoll-Goldfinch.

The Redpoll-Greenfinch is also worth cultivating. The Greenfinch hen takes to the nest readily, and the Hybrid from them is greatly to be prized.

The Goldfinch-Siskin is a lovely Hybrid. Having an even blend of the colours of the two parents, it attains charming plumage in its second year.

The Siskin-Canary, the Greenfinch-Canary, and the Redpoll-Canary are all nice Mules, and are full of interest.

The Hybrid and Mule-breeder will have to be astir early if he wishes to make the most of his opportunities.

Sunflower Seed.

Except as an item in mixtures of seeds and corn for Parrots and Parrakeets, sunflower, as it is called, is of little importance for seed-eaters. Many kinds of the Parrot tribe are exceptionally fond of it, and with their powerful beaks are quite able to negotiate it when it comes to cracking its shell to get at the kernal.

Although very oily and nutritious it does not appear to have such harmful effects when consumed liberally as is usually the case with rich and oily seeds. The chief objection to using it freely is that the birds are apt to reject all other seeds in favour of the sunflower, and this invariably occasions great waste, even if it does not affect the health adversely.

It might also be used for the larger Finches, either British or foreign, and for birds of the Tit family. But for the bulk of British Finches, Canaries, and birds of about their size, the seed is too large for them to crack. Otherwise they are all very partial to the kernel.

If it were deprived of its husk, and the kernel chopped into fragments, it might be used more freely than it is, particularly in large aviaries, and outdoor structures. Its size is really a greater detriment to its use for small birds than the strength of the ligaments of the husks. The latter would certainly not be beyond the power of any ordinary Finch or Canary, were it not that the seed is too large for the birds to get a fair grip of it, hence their inability to crack it.

Such birds as the Nuthatch, the Tit, and a few others, which have the habit of placing the seed down and hammering the husk open by repeated blows of the beak, can in spite of their small size quite easily deal with sunflower seed. The Tits in particular are exceptionally fond of it, as are also many of the soft-billed birds which have the habit of opening it in the same manner as the Tit and Nuthatch.

Gold of Pleasure.

This is a small ochcrous brown seed produced by a flowering plant which is often grown in old-fashioned cottage gardens. Of late years it has been stocked by most large dealers in bird seeds. It is of an oily nature. It has a very stimulating effect upon Canaries, and is exceptionally useful for helping to bring them into good breeding condition when they are a little backward in spring.

The bland oil it possesses doubtless gives it cleansing and mildly aperient qualities. But it must not be used liberally. Its proper use is to give a very small quantity occasionally.

For bringing Canaries into condition, for example, it is sufficient to give about a saltspoonful to each bird every second day, and alternate it with a similar quantity of inga, or niger and hemp. As an occasional pick-me-up it will also be found useful.

Its use for British Finches is similar to the above, except that it may be used as a very small proportion of the regular stock mixture for these birds, especially where they are kept in large aviaries where they get plenty of exercise. Linnets, Redpolls, and birds of this class are particularly partial to it.

Shepherd's Purse.

The seed of this plant is not very unlike that of gold of pleasure, but is somewhat smaller. It is very easy to harvest, and is easily freed from the husks in which it grows. Most of the British Finches will relish it as a change, but again it may be regarded as the special favourite of the Linnet tribe.

The cleaned seed may be useful enough as a change during the winter and spring months. Some fanciers are not much in favour of it, as they do not think the birds seem to care much for it. In its half-ripened state, however, if the sprays of seed are gathered and given as green food, the birds are extremely fond of it—Canaries as well as Britishers. This is the form in which most fanciers prefer to make free use of it.

When the birds are in very large flights, or flying loose in rooms or aviaries, the whole plant should be torn up by the roots and thrown in without shaking every scrap of soil from the roots. The reason for this is that shepherd's purse is the food-plant of numerous insects, both above and below the ground, and a plant torn up in this way frequently teems with tiny larvæ and minute insects about the foliage, and very small maggots about the roots. All this is most excellent food for practically all commonly-kept birds, even Canaries being exceptionally fond of hunting it out and devouring it.

Soft-billed birds, both British and foreign species, revel in hunting out these small living things, and it will be exceedingly few that escape their prying eyes. The only objection to giving plants in this way to birds kept in ordinary-sized cages is that the cramped space is sometimes the cause of their soiling their plumage with it.

Maw Seed.

This is undoubtedly one of the most valuable seeds the fancier is provided with. The maw seed of commerce is a very small kidney-shaped seed of a bluish-grey colour. It is obtained from the white poppy, from which the opium of commerce is also obtained. The latter drug, however, is got from the milky juice which exudes from the fleshy capsule in which the seed is retained when its surface is scratched, and is entirely absent from the seeds. Possibly other closely allied varieties of the poppy may yield a portion of the maw seed of commerce, but that obtained from our wild poppies is of quite a different colour, being very dark brown.

Whether the seed of our wild poppies could safely be used in place of maw for Canaries and similar closely-confined birds, the writer would not venture to say, although some have been known to use it in small quantities without any apparent difference in effect from the blue-grey seed.

For British birds, especially those kept in good-sized aviaries, some would not hesitate to use it freely. If its effect was invariably the same as the blue-grey variety, there is probably no other seed which could be gathered at first hand from its native wilds with greater ease than that of poppies.

A good sample of maw, in addition to being of a distinct blue-grey hue, should be so full of oil that if a single grain is smashed between the thumb nails a small patch of free oil is pressed out.

Its chief use is for helping birds to cast their feathers during the moulting season. But if it is used too freely over a lengthened period, it will throw the birds into a state of continual moulting, and bring about a rotten condition of the plumage. It is mixed in egg food both during the moulting season and when the birds are feeding young, chiefly as a kind of condiment to tempt the birds to eat the soft food more freely, which they will do for the sake of getting the maw, of which they are particularly fond. In the breeding season it is also believed to assist the young in growing their first plumage. However these facts may lie, it is not everybody who approves of the plan in either case, preferring rather to keep the soft food as simple and pure as possible, and to give all seeds, whatever kind it may be, separately.

A Word of Caution.

Although maw is so very small in the grain, it will be found, if one watches the birds, that every seed is carefully "shelled" and the husk rejected by the birds just the same as they do with Canary or any of the larger seeds. Now, when it is mixed with the soft food the birds must of necessity be compelled to swallow a certain proportion of the seed whole, husks and all together. This may not affect old birds injuriously, but the case may be very different when given to very young birds in this way; and in any case fanciers may take it that the birds know best what is good for them in this way, and should, therefore, not force them to systematically swallow things in the way of food which they know the birds would totally reject if they had any choice in the matter.

Another use for maw at any season is to correct any undue looseness in the bowels. A small teaspoonful may be given daily for a few days with this object in view with great advantage. Still, when maw is not just at hand this same effect can be achieved quite as well by giving a teaspoonful of hemp daily for a few days.

During the moulting season half a teaspoonful of maw may be given to each bird daily until they have ceased dropping feathers and will very materially assist and expedite the progress of the moult. This use for it applies equally well to British Finches, and indeed to the great majority of all cage birds, both soft and hard-billed. For Larks especially it is most valuable in helping to bring them through a good moult.

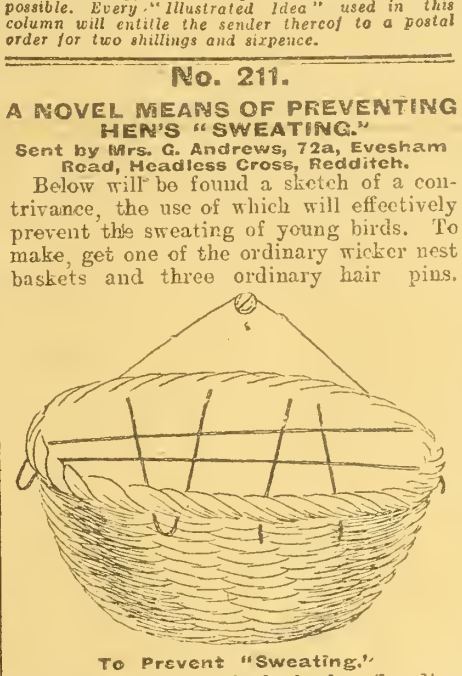
A NOVEL MEANS OF PREVENTING HEN'S "SWEATING."

Sent by Mrs. G. Andrews, 72a, Evesham Road, Headless Cross, Redditch.

Below will be found a sketch of a contrivance, the use of which will effectively prevent the sweating of young birds. To make, get one of the ordinary wicker nest baskets and three ordinary hair pins.



To Prevent "Sweating."

Lace the pins through the basket (bending the ends down to prevent them getting displaced), two across one section and one crossing the other two, as shewn in sketch. The parent bird thus sits on the wire without sweating the young. I lost my first nest of young through the sweating of the hen, and this led me to devise what I have above described in order to prevent further losses. I have now a nest of strong young in a basket with the wire attached, and I find the means a very successful one.—Mrs. G. Andrews.

HOW TO MAKE A CAGE-DOOR LATCH.

of the window. Bore a hole in the door and bend the heaviest bit of wire you can get into the shape indicated. WILD BIRD LIFE.

A Song of Songs.

Nightingale song surpasses all other in melodious richness, but its infinite variety is one of its chief charms. The listener never has the slightest idea what to expect next. It may be a low sweet whistle, so clear and rich that no instrument could imitate it—a perfect rippling water bubble—or, it may be a liquid double note, so beautiful to listen to, but yet so difficult to describe. Every bird-lover should make an effort to hear the King of Songsters. He should listen to a good one and study each passage carefully before coming to any rash conclusions that the song has been over-rated. The fact that he warbles at night when the woods are still and rivals are fast asleep lends an additional charm to the melody, but you may hear him in the day time, when the air is full of music, when the Thrush, Blackbird, and Robin sing their loudest, and the fluttering Skylark trills overhead. The richness of his notes surpasses them all, and you listen as intently and as much enraptured as you did by the copse after sundown, when no other sound was heard, save the uneasy wailing of the Peewits on the uplands.

Tame Partridges.

Although the Partridge is much shyer than the Pheasant, it occasionally becomes exceedingly tame without any special care being taken with it. Instances are numerous of one or two of a covey coming regularly to feed with the poultry at the farmhouse, and a case is on record of one entering a house and enjoying the warmth of the fire.

Increase of Kites.

It is only by the care and activity of the the Kites' Protection Committee that these one-time common birds have been saved from total extinction. From Wales, some nine nests have been reported, and with ordinary luck these should be nearly doubled next year. The great enemy to guard against is as usual the egg collector, who would not be satisfied with one clutch but would have the whole nine if he was able to get them, regardless of the loss of the species. In the time of Henry VIII. London swarmed with Kites, attracted by the offal thrown into the streets, upon which they fed.

Across the Footpath.

In the spring and summer we cannot resist the temptation of turning out of the dusty road into the footpath. In the winter we keep more to the high-road, for the bye-ways are dirty and bad for pedestrians, but now they afford good walking, and the green hedge-rows with a sight of the sweet-scented "May," tempt us to take to the path. Some movement in the hawthorn, where a tiny bird has flicked the leaves before dropping into the thick undergrowth, reminds us that we shall here find Finch and Warbler, for all small birds dearly love a tangled hedge-row. A Linnet alights on a spray jutting over the path, exposing his ruddy breast, while piping a sweet little song. There is still a movement in the tall grass, conveying to us the knowledge that something living is to be seen if we wait. Leaning against a convenient post we watch the spot, and presently a small brown bird, with quiet, graceful manner is seen for a second and is as quickly hidden from our view. It is one of the Warblers, but we need not wait; we may probably identify him the next time he is seen. Or we may stay an hour and get nothing but fleeting glances. Further up the lane we see birds in the footpath and others constantly flitting about. The hedge-rows are full of life and are gay with flowers and budding sprays. Presently the June roses will have to be moved before we can peep into the flimsy home of the Lesser Whitethroat, or that of the more robust Greenfinch.

PARROT PROBLEM

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle," now containing 168 pages. This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four week's trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

PARROT AVIARIES, MORECAMBE.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositer. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

WILLIAMSON, GEMMELL & CO.,

Clifton House, 146, Lovely-lane, Warrington, Lanes., May 30, 1905. Messrs. Williamson, Gemmell and Co., seed merchants, 263, Argyle Street, Glasgow.—Gentlemen, — I am in receipt of the supply of cage bird seeds which I ordered on the 26th inst. I am pleased with the quality. Allow me, gentlemen, to say that I have bought this kind of seeds for my birds now for over four years from most seed merchants, but never before have I been able to get the quality of seed you consigned to me; in fact, the quality exceeded my expectations by at least 25 per cent. In conclusion, you may account me as another customer enrolled on your books for my future seeds, whilst you continue to favour me with such quality of seeds.—I am, gentlemen, yours faithfully, A. BOULTON BISHOP.

SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED COLOUR FEEDS.

Norwich Exhibitors. Read these.

At Crystal Palace Show, 1908. Every 1st prize winner, including championship diploma in open Norwich classes, were moulted on Royal Red. These are the classes where you can't win without colour. Mr. J. F. Bishop, Nottingham, writes, May 6th, 1908: "I have much pleasure in stating all my birds have been moulted on your Royal Red feed at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908. I won three champion classes in Norwich, including five specials for the best Norwich in the show, also many other prizes at Nottingham, Derby, Ilkeston, Wellingboro, etc." Mr. E. Baker, Cowes, May, 1908, writes: "Your Royal Red feed worked wonders again last season, as all will know with my winnings, which included three firsts at last Palace Show." Also have testimonials and orders this year from Messrs. Collings, Spilman, Cook, Tweedle, Barnes, Vardy, Lowe, Eckersley, Howe, Booth, Hope, Harland, Howard, Shaw, Bowyer, Morris, Hodder, Cleminson, Sherrington, Hill, and Stewart, etc., etc.,

Yorkshire Exhibitors. Read these.

Mr. J. Wilcock, Eccleshill, writes: "May 7th, 1908.—Sir,—Just a few lines to let you know all my birds have done extra well on your Royal Red feed. I was third for the great Yorkshire challenge cup, second for the Cinnamon-marked trophy, and third Shackleton trophy, and winner of L. and P.O.S. Cup, London; also won 50 specials, 63 firsts, 59 seconds, 51 thirds, 35 fourths, beside 100 other prizes, and second for Yorkshire Club specials. I think this speaks extra well for the grand bright rich colour I got, which pleases our judges so well. Send me half-cwt. at once." Mr. J. C. Barnes, Sheffield, writes: "February, 1908.—Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy I have great pleasure in informing you of the wonderful depth of colour I got in my birds last season by using your Royal Red. They came out exceedingly hot and beautifully bright, and not in the least bricky. At Sheffield Show, Nov. 8th-9th, I won silver challenge cup (making three years in succession), silver medal for hottest bird, special for best Buff cock, special for best hen, eight firsts, nine seconds, five thirds, and other honours. For last 10 years I have used no other feed, and I have great pleasure in recommending its use to all who are ambitious of procuring the highest colour at lowest cost." Also used last year by Messrs. Halliday, Cuthbertson, A. Hirst, Judge Battye, Greaves, Hartley, Parnell and Sons, Crisp, Nelson, Cowgill, Mallinson and Son, etc., etc.

Cinnamon Exhibitors.

READ THIS. Mr. E. Godley, Rishton, May 13th, 1908.—I may say your colour feed was extra last season, and I won more prizes than ever before which was

My colour was marvellous. Send me ½ cwt. Royal Red at once.

Also Messrs. Dormer's, Bentley's, Silk's, Howe's, Riding's, were moulted on Royal Red. Every 1st, 2nd, 3rd prize winner in Cinnamon section at last Crystal Palace Show were moulted solely on Royal Red.

Scotch Exhibitors. Read these.

At Glasgow and West of Scotland Norwich Plainhead Club Show in November, 1907, out of 16 colour-fed Norwich classes, 14 firsts were won with birds moulted on Royal Red. At Edinburgh Scottish National 8 firsts, 8 seconds, 9 thirds, 10 fourths in open Norwich. Every winner in Cinnamon section all moulted solely on Royal Red feed. Have scores more, but above should prove enough to satisfy you or anyone that there is only one colour feed on this earth—that's Sandiford's Royal Red. Prices Royal Red, 1 lb. 2/-, 2 lb. 3/6, 5 lb. 7/6; 14 lb. 17/-. Hot Natal, 2/- lb., 2 lb. 3/6. All carriage paid. Wholesalers and agents write for terms.

THE CANARY MARKET OF THE WORLD.

Remember! Birds cannot be cheap when they are purchased from Norwich a few pairs at a time from small dealers, and then offered, with all the incidental expenses, as "Cheapest, etc.," but this is what really does happen. Hence, by direct dealing, I can sell cheaper than most can buy. This is a well-known fact. I do not advertise for "Remnants" under one name and sell under another, and then call these collections "large stocks." I offer what I possess and that only, wherein lies the great difference between facts that can be proved and silly statements that cannot.

Wild Plants for Cage Birds.

Weeds and Seeds of the Field and Wayside described

By R. MORSE.
With Footnotes, etc., by G. E. Weston.

Grasses.

Grass is so exceedingly abundant that a description seems almost superfluous. It may, however, surprise some to hear that there are no less than about 3,600 different kinds. In size, too, they differ greatly, some species attaining very large proportions, such as the bamboo (which is a kind of grass). Bamboos have been known to reach a height of over 100 ft., but it is with the smaller English species I am going to deal.

One has only to go into a meadow or along a wayside when some common species of grass are seeding, to become aware of the fact that our wild, feathered friends make very great use of grass-seed as a part of their diet. Do not we also eat grass-seed? Is not the "staff of life" prepared from a member of this self-same grass family? To be sure it is. Let us then do our best to supply our cage-birds with a diet which they will greatly appreciate.

Canary Grass (Phalaris canariensis).

This grass is cultivated to a great extent in central and southern Europe, and the seeds are gathered and sold as Canary seed. Although probably not a wild plant in this country, it may often be found growing as an "escape," and in some districts considerable quantities could easily be gathered. The writer knows a quiet, little out-of-the-way town in Essex, where boys go out and gather this grass seed which is sometimes used in vases as an ornament.

It is an upright plant, from two to three feet high, and its rather plentiful leaves are of a pretty blue-grey colour, known to botanists as glaucous leaves. The heads are somewhat egg-shaped, and are about an inch long on an average, but are sometimes much smaller. On the other hand, they are occasionally found as much as an inch and a half in length.

Rye Grass. Canary Grass.

They are made up of flat, pale-yellow scales, each of which has a broad, green line down each side. It is an annual plant (i.e., it dies down yearly), and is to be found in bloom from June till August. The seeds soon ripen, and are then, of course, ready to gather for storage.

Wall Barley (Hordeum murinum).

This is likewise a well-known and very common grass, and somewhat resembles the ordinary barley of the farmer. It grows from one to two feet high, and is a rather coarse grass. The leaves are not very large, and are narrow and rough. The spike is almost cylindrical, instead of being flattened, as in the cultivated barley, and reaches a length of about two or three inches. These spikes are green, and have large numbers of long, rough awns. Children love to pluck them and tuck them up their sleeves, while they walk along swinging their arms and singing the rhyme:

"Adam and Eve
Crawl up my sleeve."

This the spikes actually do, on account of their formation, as may be proved by trial.

Wild Oat (Avena fatua).

This is of frequent occurrence in cornfields, and is generally well known. It grows to a height of about three feet, and has smooth stems, except at the points where the leaves are given off (called the "nodes"), which are hairy.

The heads are about eight or ten inches long and spreading. The spikelets each have three flowers, and are about one inch long. It is in bloom during June and July, and is an annual.

Quaking Grass. Wall Barley.

Quaking Grass, Totter Grass, or Ladies' Hair (Briza media).

I should think there is hardly a single child in the country districts who has not gathered handfuls of this grass for home decoration. It is, indeed, very pretty, and somewhat resembles the well-known Maidenhair fern. It usually grows to a height of about one foot, and the little egg-shaped spikelets are prettily variegated with green and purple, and each contains about five or six tiny flowers.

It is wonderfully common on dry pastures and downs, where it may be found blooming during the summer months. It is a perennial.

Sheep's Fescue (Festuca ovina).

This is one of the commonest grasses growing on dry and elevated pastures. It has a glaucous hue, somewhat similar to that of Canary grass described above. It is densely tufted, and varies in height from three inches to two feet, the slender stems being four-angled and rough below the flowering heads.

The leaves nearly all spring directly up from the base of the plant, and in shape are almost cylindrical. The flowers, which appear in June and July, are of a purplish colour, and the flowering panicles reach a length of about three inches. It is a perennial plant, and is very variable in size and character.

There is another species of Fescue known as Tall Fescue, which is common in wet places and by river banks. It sometimes reaches a height of six feet, hence its name.

Rye Grass or Way Bent (Solium perenne).

This is so common in waste places and by roadsides that it is known by almost every one. Even children know this grass, and never tire of playing "Tinker, Tailor, etc.," with it, as they carefully pull off one spikelet after another. The stem is usually about a foot or eighteen inches high, and the spike of flowers may be about six inches, or rather more, in length.

The small spikelets are some distance apart, and the stem makes a bend between each pair of them. It is a very hardy, perennial grass and blooms during early summer.

The Italian rye grass, a much larger species, is very well known in a cultivated state, and is a most valuable fodder-grass.

THE SHOWS.

GRIMSBY AND DISTRICT O.S.

A meeting was held at the Hall of Science, Grimsby, on June 2nd, when there was a nest feather show and table show for British birds. Mr. George Harland, of Hull, judged. Votes of thanks were passed to Mr. C. B. Hankey for kindly granting the society permission to visit Croxby Ponds recently, which proved so enjoyable, and also to Mr. Harland for his services as judge. NOR. LEEDS C.B.S.

A very successful meeting and a first nest feather show were held at headquarters, on June 6, when a large number of fanciers and friends were present. Mr. Chambers occupied the chair. Mr. King officiated as judge, while the business of the meeting was in progress, and his awards were well received. Fifty birds were staged in 5 classes. Norwich turned up well, 23 being entered in the Buff class. Some good birds were on view, and with a successful moult these should be heard of again. Competition was keen amongst novice fanciers. Mr. Woof gave a clock to the novice gaining most points at this show, and it was won by H. Smith with 19 points, he being closely followed by Mr. Tose with 17 points. Mr. Farrar won both specials in the Yorkshire classes with two grand birds of good quality; Mr. Tose special in Norwich yellows with a bird of good type and quality; and Mr. Stead Special for Norwich Buff with a topper of a youngster. The business was the drawing up of the schedule for young bird show, on July 11, when both cups and medals will be competed for, 24 classes comprising the schedule. We also enrolled four new members. Will fanciers please note that we have arranged to go to Monk Fryston for our annual excursion on June 20; all who intend going will please send their names to me not later than June 14, for tickets of admission to view the private grounds and aviaries.—Adults 1d., and children half-price.

WALLSEND AND MID-TYNE C.B.A.

Show of young birds held at Station Hotel, Wallsend, on June 6th. There was a rather indifferent turn-out of birds, as our members appear to have made a bad start this year. It was jokingly remarked, however, by some of the more unfortunate, that the successful exhibitors at this venture will have to have their spikes sharpened for the annual show. Border fancies beaded the list with fifteen entries in three classes; they were admired by everyone, and not a few of them will be heard of later on. Next came the Norwich with eleven entries in three classes. There were two particularly good birds in this section—the property of Mr. McGinn. One of them, a buff-marked bird, was voted by all as the best bird in the show, and right well did he deserve the honour, as he is a gem; with a good moult he is sure to bring a lot more honours to his proud owner. The Yorkshires scarcely came up to expectations, only averaging three per class. The winning yellow of this section is a beauty, and ran the buff-marked Norwich of Mr. McGinn's a close race for highest honours. The hottest competition was in the A.V. class, the judge having some difficulty in getting himself suited; the winner was a Gold Lizard belonging to Mr. John Hyslop. He is a "good 'un" and no mistake, and "Jack is his master." But it was a very close race with it and Mr. John McQuillen's yellow self green Border, which was admired by all, and voted the best little Border in the show. We also had a table show of British birds—a nice little collection, eighteen in all. A pleasing feature of it was that Mr. Wm. Richardson has taken his father's place in our club (his father having died but a few weeks ago), and won two of the four classes. Mr. J. Shephard (Newcastle) judged, everyone being satisfied with his awards.

HARPENDEN.

This enjoyable fixture came off as usual on Whit Monday, in Rothamsted Park, but cage birds were not so numerous as last year, neither was the quality so high-class. The most noticeable exhibits were Mr. Andrews' string of Mules, Mr. Timœus' Scarlet Tanager, and Mr. Harris's Goldfinch. The birds were nicely staged, and their wants well attended to by the stewards, Messrs. Willmott, Willis, Lawrence, Anderson, Woollat, and Wilkinson, whilst Mr. J. B. Townend, the energetic secretary, looked well after the general arrangements. Mr. C. E. Silk had been announced to judge, but he was not present, and the committee asked Mr. House to take his place.

NOR. YELL. (4): 1, res., Wiggins, very pretty 3-pointed bird, level in colour, sound in feather; 3, Litchfield, clear, nice shape, not so tight. ABERDARE.

This show was held on June 9th and 10th in the Market Hall. Owing doubtless to the fact that the executive did not hold the show under the rules and licence of the C.B.U. the entries did not come up as they might have done. This debarred the great majority of Welsh exhibitors. The exhibits were nicely staged, and amongst them were some really good exhibits. They received the best of attention from a good committee of willing and enthusiastic fanciers. Mr. D. L. Eynon makes a capital secretary, having everything in first-rate order. He was most courteous and obliging to all, and had a good assistant in Mr. David Evans. The awards were made by Mr. J. H. Payne.

OUTINGS.

ALTRINCHAM C.B.S.

Representatives from the Manchester Northern Counties, North Manchester, Pendleton and Salford, and the Sale Open Societies availed themselves of the invitation to join this society in their annual ramble, which took place on May 30, to Castle Mills, one of the Cheshire beauty spots. A start was made at about 3 o'clock from Hale Station, by the way of some beautiful gardens, thence along country lanes, until we arrived on the banks of the River Bollin. The whole country-side looked at its very best. Bird life was very plentiful, the first "find" being a young Thrush. The Thrushes seem to be very numerous in this part of Cheshire. Amongst the birds we heard and saw were Cuckoos, Missel Thrushes, Linnets, Greenfinches, Blackbirds, Pied Wagtails, Flycatchers, Whitethroats, Corncrake, Wrens, Yellowhammers, Robins, Blue Tits, Song Thrushes, Blackcaps, Bullfinches, Goldfinches, Bramblefinches, Skylarks, Kestrels, Magpies, Swallows, and Hedge Accentors. We also saw the Bat. On our arrival at the Bollin House Farm, tea was provided and justice was done to the "soft feed"—egg food included. After tea a start was made for Mabberley Station, which was reached at 9.9 p.m., everybody enjoying the outing, and expressing a wish to go again. The party numbered about 40. Amongst those present we noticed Messrs. Geo. W. F. Lythgoe, sec. of the Manchester and Northern Counties' Society, and of the Cage Bird Union; J. Raynes, sec. of the Norwich Plainhead Club; J. Davey, sec. of the North Manchester Society, and J. Irlam, assistant sec. of the Sale Open Society; also Messrs. S. Cook, Brierley, C. C. Blackshaw, F. Wardleworth, J. Critchley, W. Wilkinson, A. Taylor, C. Clark, Pollard, H. Whitney, and many other well-known fanciers.—TOM HARRISON, hon. sec.

KILMARNOCK O.C.B.S.

On May 29 a large turnout of members of Kilmarnock Cage Bird Society met in Billfield Tavern to show their respect and esteem for one of their members, Mr. Jas. Wyllie, who sailed on June 5th for Long Island, U.S.A. Mr. Wm. Guthrie, President of the Club, occupied the chair, and in a few well-chosen remarks wished Mr. Wyllie, on behalf of the Cage Bird Fanciers of Kilmarnock, every success in his new undertaking. He then called on Mr. Jas. Johnston to make the presentation. Mr. Johnston referred to Mr. Wyllie's long connection with the club, both as a member and as an official. He had been a member for upwards of fifteen years, and had held the post of secretary (during the time Mr. Johnston was president), for five years. When Mr. Wyllie took over the secretaryship there was a membership of thirty, and it said much for Mr. Wyllie's popularity and hard work that it had now increased to the high total of seventy; he also referred to the flourishing condition of the club's funds, which he also put down to Mr. Wyllie's credit. He then presented Mr. Wyllie with a purse of sovereigns, also a pipe and tobacco pouch, from the fanciers of Kilmarnock, and proposed his health and success in his new undertaking, which was done most heartily by the company rising and singing "For he's a Jolly Good Fellow." Mr. Wyllie made a very feeling reply. The Kilmarnock O.C.B.S. took this opportunity of presenting the handsome silver cup, presented by Mr. J. King, L.D.S., for the best young bird at their show (bred by exhibitor), which was won by one of their members, Mr. John Noble, by a young Crest. Mr. Watson, the late secretary of the Society, made the presentation, and on handing the cup to Mr. Noble, expressed the pleasure it gave him, also to the members, that it had been won for the first time by one of their number. He also referred to the success of their late show, and he was sure it would become one of the best in Scotland. Mr. Noble, in replying, gave some good advice to the novices present, and told them always to have an aim in view, for in that way lay success on the show bench, no matter what variety of Canary one took up with. A very pleasant evening was thereafter spent, songs being ably rendered by Messrs. C. Noble, A. Bowie, J. Noble, J. Johnston, J. Dunsmuir, C. Smith, R. McCallum, and the guest of the evening, Mr. Wyllie.—JAMES MURDOCK, Hon. sec. of the Kilmarnock O.C.B.S.

Books Every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

Canary Breeding for Beginners -- Post free, 7d.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

House's Canary Manual - - - - Post free, 1/2

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual - - - - post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") - - - post free 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

The Colour-feeding of Canaries.

By JAMES HUTCHINSON.

A Lecture recently delivered before the Members and Friends of the Kilmarnock C.B.F.C.

Mr. James Hutchinson's lecture was closely followed by a good audience, Mr. Jas. Johnstone presiding. The lecturer said:

As you are all well aware the question of colour-feeding is a difficult one to discuss among some sections of the Fancy, as it is quite a common thing to hear people (who are not in favour of colour-feeding) say, "It is cruel to make birds take such stuff." My own opinion is that if colour-feed is made with good fresh eggs and biscuits properly mixed (as I shall endeavour to show you), I cannot see wherein it can do healthy birds any harm. Of course, if a bird is not healthy, then I would advise you not to colour-feed it. If it is suffering from any internal disease, such as liver complaint, the colour-feed would act on the bird's liver much as salt acts on a cut finger; but if there be no cut on the finger the salt will not nip it. Neither will colour-feed do any harm to a sound bird.

Colour-feeding Described.

Now, to come to the point; what is colour-feed? It is simply an agent to assist nature to display her glory in the birds to the fullest extent, in the same way as a gardener uses soot, ammonia, and various other fertilizers, to bring out the beauty and colour of the flowers he is growing; not a man in this room to-night would think of telling a gardener who was using these fertilizers that he was simply killing his plants.

Colour-feeding is interesting and honest. It is interesting as a process in the same way in which a bud of a flower is interesting, as day after day it unfolds its petals until it bursts into a blaze of beautiful colour. It is honest because in these days its sale is accompanied by fullest instructions, so that even the modest novice need not despair in colour-feeding his birds if he follows out these instructions. It is not the same now as when it was first introduced. Information could not then be got for love or money.

In fact, for exhibition purposes it is the same in birds as in flowers where colour is wanted, and the man who does not use fertilizers for his flowers or colour-feed for his birds has to take a back seat as regards prizes.

Now let us consider colour-feed and how to procure it. A great many recipes appear in the different Fancy papers, but I think the novice would be well advised to buy his colour-feed from a reliable agent, as he would then have a feed ready for mixing. I have always been in the habit of getting mine from Sandiford's, and I consider it as good as any in the market.

When to Start Colour-feeding.

The question is now, when should we start colour-feeding? Some make a practice of colour-feeding young birds from the nest, but this I have never done. Of course, in this district we have very few First Feather shows to encourage us to colour-feed from the nest, so I consider it a waste of time, as I do not see the use of colouring a bird twice in one season. If you colour a bird from the nest it will cast all except its tail and flight feathers, and you will have to colour-feed it over again.

One thing you must be careful to watch and that is to have the colour-feed ready, so that if a young bird gets plucked after leaving the nest by the parents or by any other bird flying about in the breeding-cage with it, you can give it a small quantity of colour-feed, with a view to colouring the new feathers that will come. Otherwise, if you don't use colour-feed when the young bird is plucked, if it is a good specimen and you intend it for exhibition, you will have to pluck all these feathers out again, which is very dangerous, besides being very trying to the bird's system. I am speaking from experience; I had one that had to be plucked after it was finished, but it never reached the exhibition table, as it sang, "Sweet repose." Now, I always try to have a little colour-feed at hand to mix with egg-food, so that if I notice a young bird being plucked I can give it some; when the new feathers come they are then coloured.

Some fanciers hold that young birds do not begin to moult till they are from ten to twelve weeks old, but if you don't start to colour-feed until then, in a good many cases they will have started moulting before that, though you may not have noticed it; and when the birds are finished they will be patchy in colour, caused by some of the feathers being moulted before you gave the colour-feed. My advice to the young fancier that has not had much experience in colour-feeding is to start when the young are from six to eight weeks old.

Put one teaspoonful of colour-feed to one egg and gradually increase it to the full strength by the time the birds are twelve weeks old, when the colour will have got right into the system.

Whether they are early or late moulters, all old birds intended to be colour-fed should be put on to their colour-feed about the first or second week in July, or as soon as they are past breeding. Birds intended for colour-feeding should have stopped breeding about the beginning of July, so as to get the colour well into their system before they begin to moult.

What to Give.

Along with the colour-feed I give my birds a regular supply of linseed, as it helps to put a gloss on the feathers. Another very good thing I give my birds about twice a week (for the same purpose) is a piece of boiled carrot, which I put between the wires. I also give them in their water a piece of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea every second day; this acts as a tonic on the bird's system and fixes the colour as well.

As regards taking away Canary seed from a bird while colour-feeding, you must use your own judgment. If you see a bird is not eating its colour-feed, it is advisable to take the seed away for a couple of hours each day; but if the birds are brought gradually on to the colour-feed (that is given a little at a time) increased gradually to its full strength, there should be no difficulty in getting them to take it. If it is well made and given fresh at least twice a day, you will get them to eat more than if you filled up their dish for a whole day's allowance. As you know, Canaries as a rule are very inquisitive; they always want to pick at everything new you put in their dish.

Another thing I would like to mention is in regard to birds which are going to be late in starting the moult. A very good thing (and not an expensive one, either) is a little sulphur (about ¼ teaspoonful) mixed with one egg and biscuit once a week; but be sure you don't give them the bath for two days after you have given them the sulphur, as this acts on the bird's system, opening its pores. The use of sulphur enables it to get through the moult quicker, and the quicker a bird does this the better.

All birds that are being colour-fed require a little shading from the sun's light. The sun will draw a certain amount of colour out of the birds unless they are shaded. It depends greatly on the position of your bird-room as to which would be the best way for you to shade it. A very good plan is to get a piece of muslin and hang it in front of your cages in the form of curtains, so that you can draw them aside to get your hand into their cages. The curtains will also protect the birds from draughts and dust, keeping them both clean and comfortable. Birds that are moulting should be disturbed as little as possible.

How to Mix Colour-feed.

I will now proceed to give you an idea as to how I mix my colour-feed. In the first place I would advise all who have not got an egg-mill to get one before the breeding season begins, as one of these affords a great saving of time in mixing either egg or colour-feed.

We will assume that the birds are all on the full strength of colour-feed. In the first place I put the egg and one butter-short biscuit through the mill; then I soak one half a slice of stale bread to each egg. I let the water-tap run on it for a little while, and with the hand squeeze the water out of it. Then I proceed to mix it with the egg and biscuit and put in the colour-feed—four teaspoonfuls of cool feed and one of hot natal. Mix all well together before putting through the mill again. Then I put it all through the mill twice, and add four teaspoonfuls of fine castor sugar. Let this stand over night, because then the sugar draws out the colour more than when it is newly made. Now you have the colour-feed ready for the birds, and the main thing is to try and give it always the same strength and moisture, for if you make it too sloppy the birds will not eat it at all.

I hope my remarks will be of some service to the young fancier for the coming breeding season.

The chairman said he felt confident all present had benefited by Mr. James Hutchinson's paper. After several questions, which the lecturer answered in a fancier-like manner, a very hearty vote of thanks, to which Mr. Hutchinson suitably replied, brought the meeting to a close.—R. McCAW, secretary.

The monthly meeting was held on June 4th in the Oddfellows' Hall. There was a good rally of members. The books are now closed to old members, who have failed to pay the remaining part of dues, but new members can be enrolled until July 18th. The membership is 67.—W. CHUBB, Sec.

LEWISHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A good number of members and friends met at headquarters, Roebuck Hotel, Lewisham, to hear Mr. Crisp on the rearing and feeding of young Canaries. Mr. Crisp handled his subject most ably, and dealt with the numerous questions which were put to him in a very satisfactory manner.—H. THOS. LUCAS, Hon. Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

On June 4th members and friends met at headquarters to hear Mr. J. W. Norris lecture on the Roller Canary. M. H. E. Tringham occupied the chair. Mr. Norris was greeted with much applause. In commencing he said that as he had recently lectured to a similar society on the Roller, he proposed on this occasion to divide his lecture into two parts, the first dealing with the Roller, and the second on the condition and the feeding of Canaries. He treated the subject of the Roller in a very able manner. The second part of his lecture came as a great treat and surprise to all, Mr. Norris dealing with his subject in a very interesting and scientific manner, demonstrating same by two hen Canaries he had brought with him. Mr. H. E. Tringham at this point in the proceedings, having to leave, Mr. E. S. Lugg was elected in his place as chairman. Mr. Norris was asked many questions, which he answered very ably, interesting his audience by preparing some egg-food in the manner adopted in Germany. He used a very ingenious little instrument, with which to shred the egg, the food being ready for birds in a few minutes. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Norris was carried unanimously, Mr. Norris suitably replying.—W. HODSON, Hon. Sec.

GARSTON B.B.A.

At the usual monthly meeting held on June 3rd, Mr. A. Mather, of Widnes, gave a very instructive and interesting lecture on the "Rearing and Feeding of young Birds." The lecturer emphasised the fact that it was absolutely essential for the fancier to pay strict and regular attention to his stock if he wanted a successful breeding season. Many useful hints were given which will no doubt prove beneficial to the members of the society if followed up. Mr. Mather spoke for about an hour. Mr. Crawley, the chairman, then invited discussion, and, needless to say, the opportunity was taken advantage of. Many difficult problems were solved, and it was only at the call of time that we brought a very pleasant and successful meeting to a conclusion.—A. WILKINSON, Hon. Sec.

Budgerigars as Cage Pets.

By S. W. BROOKE.

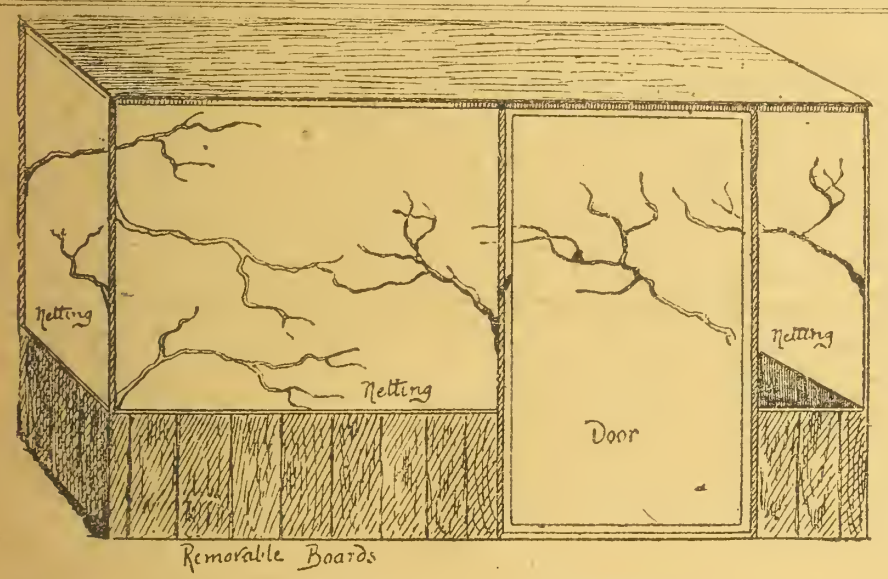
There is at the present day a tendency among beginners in the Fancy to omit all but the many breeds of Canaries. Many a one starts with a pet Canary and advances to a pair, and so commences breeding operations. But sooner or later a real lover of birds will not be contented with Canaries, but will develop a liking or a desire for a pair of one or other of the largely-imported foreign birds.

There are so many kinds of these birds that one is often doubtful which is the most interesting, and at the same time most inexpensive and cleanly of them, and which the most conveniently kept. Of course, nearly every one will differ over these points; but for those who prefer seed-eating birds, the well-known and so extensively-imported Budgerigars cannot be surpassed.

Where and How to Keep Them.

There are two varieties of these pretty and very interesting little pets—the Yellow, which is the most expensive, costing about 10s. a pair, and the Green, which costs about 5s. 6d. a pair.

The Budgerigar is a healthy and hardy bird and is very little trouble to keep in captivity; no one, not even the veriest tyro, should experience any difficulty in keeping these birds. They are most suitable for an aviary, if this can be arranged for, but will do admirably in a large, roomy cage kept indoors. It is wiser for everyone having the convenience to erect an aviary to suit his or her own taste.



Mr. Brooke's Indoor Aviary for Budgerigars.

Much depends on the position and room, and the amount of sunshine afforded.

Frequently examples of aviary construction appear in CAGE BIRDS, and styles are constantly recommended therein by Mr. W. T. Page, so that none who are unable to decide for themselves should be at a loss for knowing how to set about the keeping of Budgerigars.

In purchasing a pair or more of these birds it is better to secure a pair from a fancier who breeds his own, than start with a freshly-imported pair. It is also as well to try a pair from another fancier, so as not to have related birds.

What to Give Them.

Once healthy birds are procured no difficulty should be experienced in keeping them in good health. Canary and white millet seeds form their staple diet, spray millet seed and green grass in ear, which latter they relish so much, not being omitted. Oats in the ear are also picked over by them, and white oats are recommended for parent birds when they are feeding young ones. All available egg shells should be saved; they should be baked very hard, crushed with a rolling-pin or other suitable article, and mixed with the sand for the cage bottom, if so be the Budgerigars are kept in cages. They are very fond of this, and it prevents egg-binding. A Budgerigar is one of the cleanest birds kept in captivity. The cage, however, should be cleaned frequently—every day, if possible, or at least every other day. Failure to do this is accountable for so many birdy complaints and diseases.

Make them comfortable, and if you talk to them when feeding them (give a little seed at a time), you will find that that is the best way to tame them. They are very wild or shy at first, but with patience on the part of the one who feeds them will soon become steady. If possible, obtain a dead limb or branch from an apple tree to put in your aviary (or cage, if sufficiently large); it gives a natural appearance to the birds' home. The wood, too, is very hard, and the birds like to bite at it; it is good for their beaks. Again, a supply of cuttle fish should never be omitted from the cage or aviary.

A Doctor Seldom Wanted.

It is very rarely that these birds fall ill, but if they do, and one is seen to be mopey, or probably in the habit of shelling the seeds and not eating them, make the drinking water just slightly coloured with the best brandy obtainable, and soak a stale crust in cold water and offer when squeezed dry. Little water is consumed, but a drinking vessel should always be kept in their home. They will not bathe in water, but they delight in having a damp tuft of grass.

"Budgie" Described.

It seems hardly worth while to describe the colour and markings of these popular foreigners, but should any one not acquainted with their plumage, desire to keep a pair, a description is as follows: Length, from 7 to 8 inches; beak, Parrot shape; underparts, bright grass green; the back to the crown of the head, greenish black, each feather being edged with grass green; flight feathers, olive green on the outer edges, the third up to the eighth or ninth, having a white bar halfway, which is not visible on the closed wing. The forehead and throat are a beautiful bright yellow, with a patch of turquoise on each cheek, and a black spot on it. The tail has two long dark-blue feathers in it. The Budgerigar is a native of Australia and feeds chiefly on the grasses grown in that country.

It is quite an easy matter to distinguish the sexes by the cere at the base of the upper mandible, that of the male, after it is four months old, being generally of indigo blue; in the female it is generally brown or flesh-colour. Once seen, the bird is easily recognisable.

Tame but Pugnacious.

Cokernut husks should be hung up for the sleeping accommodation of the birds, and these will be found to be essential for breeding purposes. They can be procured from advertisers in CAGE BIRDS. The most arduous task, if the Budgerigars are kept in a cage, is the taming of them. Of course, if they are in an aviary, it does not matter, but every one keeping them in a cage should be very patient and gentle at first. It is possible, but not always probable, they will become very tame; but don't attempt to keep other birds with them in a cage, because disaster is bound to result. They are most pugnacious birds, and will soon put an end to Canaries, English birds, or small foreigners.

How to Build an Aviary.

The sketch gives a rough idea of a small aviary or large cage where I keep a pair. This structure answers very well. The drawing will probably be of some assistance to any one who intends making a small aviary and who does not wish to spend a large amount of money on it. The aviary can be completed by the outlay of ten shillings.

First of all decide on the size you propose to make it, when the right length of wood can be bought without there being any waste. Match-boarding is the cheapest to buy and answers the purpose quite well. A few lengths of thick battens are required for the frame and door.

The latter is the most difficult to make, but any carpenter will be glad to do it, and the rest is easily done. The netting, too, gives very little trouble to fix. When all this is done, get a pound tin of black and light-blue varnish paint, or enamel, and give the aviary two coatings, when it will have a nice appearance. It will, moreover, wash. Don't forget to decide on the size and work out carefully the amount of material required before starting; a lot of bother and expense will thus be saved.

I cannot show exactly how I have fixed the branch in my aviary, but go to a friend's orchard, if possible, and select the branch that suits, pruning it accordingly.

In our latest handbook, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (just published, price sixpence post free from this office), will be found very full details of the fascinating and profitable pursuit of Budgerigar breeding.

FANCIERS' FESTIVITIES.

Dalkeith and District C.B.S.

A grand smoking concert was held in the Ship Inn on June 4th. About thirty members and friends met to give the late secretary, Mr. Thomas Briggs, a hearty send-off before he sailed for America on the 6th of June. Mr. Smart, president, occupied the chair. The chairman spoke of the splendid work done by Mr. Briggs and wished him every success in his new home. Then the chairman presented Mr. Briggs with a Gladstone bag and the best wishes of the members and friends. Mr. Briggs replied, and thanked the members and friends for the handsome bag. He said he was very sorry that he was about to leave them, and wished them every success with their new secretary, Mr. Ewing. Songs were sung by Messrs. A. Jardine, W. King, S. Briggs, G. Harper, Thorburn, and Steele, and a very enjoyable evening was closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."—JOHN EWING, sec.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

A Canary's Adventure.

Quite recently a Canary escaped from its cage and flew out of the house. Eventually, it was pounced upon by the family cat, which, however, treated the bird very gently and brought it home, placing it beneath the empty cage. The Canary was found to be apparently none the worse for it's adventure, and was, of course, soon restored to its old quarters.—Sent by Florence Leybourne (age 12), 49, Penton Street, Farnworth Street, West Derby Road, Liverpool.

A Unique Home for Sparrows.

Just outside the North British Railway station, in Edinburgh, there are three signal-posts opposite each other. Near the top of each signal there is an open ornamental ball, made of iron; and in each of those balls there is a Sparrow's nest; the insides of the balls are lined with hay and feathers, etc. There is a hole in each like that in a Wren's nest, just large enough to let the birds get in. I have often seen the birds flying out whenever the signals go up or down.—Sent by W. Inglis (age 16), 6, St. Mary's Place, Edinburgh.

"Polly's a Beauty."

My auntie has a Parakeet which came from India. It is a very sensible one, and says among other things, "Twig the bobby," "Here he comes," "Block his hat," "There will be a row in the house," "No ale to-day, Frank," "What a pity!" and "Polly's a beauty." It also calls the cat and whistles to the dog.—Sent by Lily Bemrose (age 13), 65, Egypt Road, New Basford, Nottingham.

*A Yellowhammer's Faithfulness.

We have a very old Yellow-hammer, one which has won quite a number of prizes. It is very tame and will fly to the wires of the aviary, where it and a number of other birds are kept, and place its beak in my grandma's mouth. Recently it flew out while she was feeding it and got out into the garden. But, strange to say, it never attempted to fly away, but walked back into the shop where the aviary is.—Sent by Harry Lynham (aged 9 years), 70, Buccleuch Street, Kettering.

CLUB REPORTS.

MURTON F. AND F.S.

A special monthly meeting was held at Head quarters on June 6, when Mr. Terry presided over a good attendance. It was decided to have our first open show on November 28. Classes will be provided for Cage Birds, Poultry, Pigeons, Rabbits and Cavies. Half-yearly meeting will be held on July 4, when the secretary will present a statement of accounts.—J. VARDY, secretary.

TONG AND DIS. C.B.S.

At our meeting on June 2 (Mr. T. Ogden, President, in the chair), it was decided that the chairman and secretary attend headquarters, Holme Lane Hotel, on June 19, from 7.30 p.m. on 9 p.m., to receive entries for First Feather Show to be held on June 20. Entries, however, will be received up to 3 p.m. on Saturday. Members are earnestly invited to assist in making this, our first show, a success. Mr. T. Ogden then called upon Mr. L. Ogden to give us a Washing Exhibition, which he did in a very masterly manner, explaining how to handle the birds. We are to have some more exhibitions later by other experts. Mr. J. Hodgson (Bradford), will judge first show. We have now 35 members, three joining at this meeting. We shall be pleased to hear from others desirous of joining.—J. SMITH, sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Usual fortnightly meeting, held on June 6. There was a good attendance, and the chairman, Mr. J. Farrar presided. The question of the election of the other judge for our open show (Nov. 20 and 21) was then gone into, and the secretaries were instructed to make arrangements for the appointment of a capable judge, in conjunction with Mr. J. H. Roe, already elected. It was moved and carried that we add another class for foreign birds at our open show, in order to meet the requirements of the Northern B.B.M. and F.B.C. The remainder of the business was soon got through, after which the usual discussion took place, and many questions relating to the management of birds during the breeding season were asked by the younger fanciers, all of which were satisfactorily answered by the older fanciers present.—REID and MADDISON, secs.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

At the monthly meeting, held June 3rd, the classification for Nest Feather Show was considered, and it was decided that instead of the two classes for Scotch Fancies as last year, we have the old bird classes for British, and Mule or Hybrid. Messrs. A. Jones and W. H. Uzzell were elected members and two other gentlemen were nominated. Mr. Uzzell kindly promised a special prize of a cash-box value 12/6 for best bird in the Nest Feather Show. The secretary read a letter received from the secretary of the C.B.U., and the members present were in favour of the proposed additions to the rules of the Union. Upon the proposition of Mr. Dawes, it was agreed to hold a "Question Night" on the first available date. The usual monthly meeting will not be held on July 1, but a special meeting will be held the following Wednesday (July 8), to receive entries for Nest Feather Show.—J. H. de MAILLET, hon. sec.

BRADFORD (East) O.S.

The Diagram Competition, which was decided at the last meeting of our Society, proved quite an attraction, the room being well filled with fanciers, and no fewer than 20 of the members competed for the painting given by Mr. F. Gelder. The diagrams had passed through the hands of Mr. R. Halliday, a gentleman who has done his utmost for the welfare of our Society, and is always willing to give us a helping hand. After he had criticised their respective faults, he enclosed his awards in a sealed envelope, and this was not opened until each competitor had finished his effort. The most remarkable thing about the competition was its close finish, only a few points separating the whole of the competitors. Mr. W. Greenwood won the prize, his criticisms coming pretty near Mr. Halliday's. Two points only separated Messrs. Cowgill and Metcalf, who tied for 2nd place. The competition was a decided success, and it infused plenty of enthusiasm into the members. Mr. Hill then proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Gelder for his kindness in arranging the competition, and for the prize he had so generously given. This was seconded by Mr. Priestley, and supported by Messrs. Cowgill and Warner. The vote was carried. Mr. Gelder suitably responded. One new member was elected to membership, this bringing the total to 67.—H. HILL, secretary.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At the last monthly meeting, held in the Spencer Hall, a large number of members and friends were present, including several ladies. A lecture was given by our worthy chairman, Mr. Geo. Gardner, entitled "The Norwich Plainhead." Mr. Ward, vice-chairman, occupied the chair. Mr. Gardner gave us some very useful and instructive hints on the Norwich. He explained that type must come first, and that we must not blame the judge if one bird which possesses colour takes a back seat—behind the bird with true Norwich type. The lecturer then explained the proper angle at which the bird must stand across the perch; the tail and wings should be properly carried, and on no account must a hinge-tailed bird be used to breed with. Colour must be bred for and pairs properly mated, that is, either the cock bird or the hen should have green blood in it to produce birds of good colour, so that when the beautiful buff birds were placed before the judge, the lovely mealon its back at once attracted his eye, and the exhibitor gained his reward. Mr. Gardner further explained the use of double-buffing, and also the proper and most useful hens for a fancier to use. Many other things were referred to by the lecturer. The meeting was thrown open for questions, many of which were put, and ably answered. Vote of thanks to the lecturer and chairman were carried with acclamation. Seven new members were elected. The schedule of the Young Stock Show (July 11) was passed and special prizes, of which there are a goodly number, were allotted. We hope all friends will rally round us on this occasion. The next lecture (on June 26) will be given by Mr. F. Easterling on "Colour Feeding." Fanciers are invited to come and hear the secrets Mr. Easterling has to give.—W. REYNOLDS, hon. sec.

The Tong and Dis. C.B.S. has issued a fine list of members' first and second feather shows which have been arranged for the 1908 season, with well-known fanciers as judges. Good points' specials are being offered.

For their young bird show, to be held July 11th, the Highgate, Hampstead and Dis. C.B.S. has issued an ambitious schedule, comprising no fewer than 56 classes (including British and Foreign). The judge is Mr. G. Gardner.

I am pleased to be able to state, writes Mr. R. H. Turner, sec. of the Morley and Dis. C.B.S., that Mr. A. E. Hutton, member of Parliament for the Morley division, has consented to stand as hon. president of our society.

The Great Horton O.S. will hold their members' show on Saturday, June 13th, at 5 p.m., writes Mr. J. Holroyd, the hon. sec., and not at 8 p.m. as stated in the schedule. Their monthly meeting will be held on the same date at 8 p.m.

All arrangements for our First Feather show are now completed, write Messrs. Reid and Maddison, secs. of the Sunderland C.B.A., and the show will be held on July 4th, in St. Peter's Hall, Green Street, the judge being Mr. Miller.

The Hazel Grove and Dis. C.B.S. have removed from the White Hart Inn to the Grapes Hotel, writes Mr. T. Walters, the hon. sec., where we are holding our First Feather show on June 26th and 27th. Mr. W. Booth, of Hyde, will officiate as judge.

We are holding our nest feather show on July 4th, writes Mr. A. Wilkinson, Hon. Sec. of the Garston Bird Breeders' Association. Mr. Mather, of Widnes, will judge. We are also holding our old show on November 14th, when Mr. W. Mundell, of Bradford, will judge.

I was very pleased indeed to see our clear-yellow Yorks. Canary depicted on the front page of your splendid paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. Bailey (of Messrs. Bailey and Swanger, Bradford). We have already eight grand youngsters from him, and two hens gone to nest again.

The Gateshead and Dis. C.B.S. has arranged an excellent classification for its young bird show, to be held on June 20th, in the "Ye old Five Wands Inn," Bensham Road, when we note the admission will be free. Mr. Boyle (York), judges.

Our next lecture is on June 18th, writes Mr. H. Lambert Brown, hon. sec. of the London and Provincial O.S., when Mr. R. L. Crisp will lecture on "Inbreeding and Selection." As this will prove both profitable and interesting, all friends and fanciers will be most cordially welcomed.

The Metropolitan Cage Bird Association holds its Young Bird show on June 25, with Mr. G. E. Weston as judge. The hon. secretary Mr. A. J. Head (13, Atherton Street, Battersea Park Road, S.W.) will be pleased to receive applications from fanciers desirous of becoming members.

The following have been elected members of the Dulwich O.S., write Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni, the hon. secs.: Messrs. A. Lovegrove (Henley-on-Thames), W. Whiteman (Fulham), J. Elliot-Brook, H. G. Scott, D. H. Brown (Peckham), Mrs. Mazzoni, P. G. L. Kail, D. Nelson, A. Watson, W. Elson, and J. Rutherford (Dulwich).

I have been reluctantly compelled to resign the secretaryship of the Hartlepools C.B.S. owing to pressure of business, writes Mr. Ernest Woodhead. The future piloting of the society's affairs will be in the capable hands of Messrs. Williams and Easby, to whom all correspondence should be addressed at 30, Lister Street, West Hartlepool.

The prize essays which appeared in CAGE BIRDS were so interesting to me, being a lover of all birds, writes Mr. C. Hancock (Bath), that I thought if I gave my vote to one gentleman it would be unfair to the others. So I decided not to send in any vote. I have ten birds altogether, British, Mules and Canaries, and they are all singing splendidly.

We hear from Mr. J. Ferguson, the sec. of the Troon and Loans P.P. and C.B.S., that a show will be held in the Unionist Hall, Troon, on August 29th, when there will be the following classes: eight for Canaries, five for British birds, three for foreign, two for Mules and Hybrids, one for gift, and one selling. There will be a number of special prizes offered.

Without doubt Ramsden's Pure Peppers are the very best obtainable. Rich in colour, and absolutely pure. One pound canisters, 2s.; five pound canisters, 7s. 6d.; free by post. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London. Note the address. Valuable special prizes offered to exhibitors using Ramsden's Peppers only.—ADVT.)

The monthly meeting and show of Mules, British and foreign birds, writes Mr. J. H. Adams, hon. sec. of the Glasgow and Western Counties Club, will be held on June 20th, at the Good Templars' Hall, 122, Ingram-street, Glasgow. Members will please note the change of date. At this meeting business relative to the First Feather and annual club shows will be transacted.

The schedule of the North London C.B.A.'s members' young stock show, to be held on June 13th, comprises 45 classes, including 11 each in the champion and amateur sections, and 23 in the novice section. All varieties of Canaries and Mules are provided for in the above-mentioned sections, while in addition to these ten classes are provided for British and foreign birds.

The Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. book of rules and programme for 1908 is very tastefully got up, and contains a really excellent list of instructive lectures, washing exhibitions, and the like. Mr. W. Hodson (206, Crystal Palace Road, S.E.), the hon. sec., who sends it to us, will be glad to hear from fanciers in the district who would like to become members.

On receiving my copy of CAGE BIRDS for June 6th, I was very pleased to see on the frontispiece a picture of my yellow green cock Canary, which won 2nd prize and special for best second in green section, at the Scottish National Show. I may say that he won at Warrington, Leeds, Derby, Bradford, (Yorks), St. Helen's, and our own show, and the young birds I bred from him did very well on the show bench, too. Accept my best thanks for the trouble you have taken, and kindly thank your artist, Mr. Norman, for the pleasant surprise.—J. W. VERNON (Altrincham).

Mr. D. Seth-Smith, the well-known aviculturist, who undertook a journey to Australia on behalf of the London Zoological Society, has just returned to England with a magnificent collection of birds and animals, comprising very many exceptionally rare and valuable species. They have been landed in excellent condition, and the success of the "trip" must be extremely gratifying to the Zoological Society, and to Mr. Smith himself, who is to be congratulated on so ably carrying out his mission. The birds, etc., brought home will soon be on view to the general public at the Zoo.

Mr. J. Ryder, of Plymouth, sends us excellent photographs of his two winning Crests, concerning which he writes: They have splendid crests and feather like hens, while they do not need the least preparation for the show bench, being always spick and span; in fact, they have not been washed for the season, and have not been out of the money once. The nearly green Crest cock is coming two years old, and was bred from double crests—sire, clear body dark; dam, green Crest. He has won this season 1st and special at Hayle, Falmouth, Penzance, etc., and 1st CAGE BIRDS' coupon special at Hayle. The even wing-marked cock is also coming 2 years old. Sire, clear body green Crest; dam, green Crest bred. He has won this season 1st and special at Plymouth, 2nd Hayle, and 2nd CAGE BIRDS coupon special, 2nd Falmouth, etc.

A COLUMN FOR FANCIERS.

Appended are brief particulars of some of "Cage Birds" SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS for keepers and lovers of birds, with post free prices.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1
By W. GEO. CRKSWELL M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

"SEPTIC FEVER OR CANARY PLAGUE." - 7d.
By K. H. CLARKE, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

"THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY." 1½d
By J. H. PAYNE.
A Lecture reprinted from CAGE BIRDS, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the bird-room. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout postcards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular), Norwich (Yellow), Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests. Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s. 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

FANCIERS' PRINTING.
Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work.

ENTRIES CLOSE.

Redruth. — June 17th. R. E. Climas, Tolgus Mount, Redruth.
Burnley.—June 17th. G. Watson, 6, Kirkgate.

BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1908 SEASON.

A Rutherglen fancier has 30 young Canaries doing A1, and Glasgow fanciers cannot complain. One of them has 28, 23 of which are on the perch; another has 15, and several have a dozen. A big percentage of them are Scotch Fancy Canaries.—A Breeder (Glasgow).

Guiseley, Yeadon and District C.B.S.

The luck of our members seems to vary. Some are doing very well, but others are doing equally bad. When asked the cause of the ill-luck, the majority say they cannot get the hens to feed. I myself have the same complaint to make, but I attribute it to my removing in the course of the breeding season.—W. S. Thompson, sec. of the Guiseley, Yeadon and Dis. C.B.S.

Sunderland C.B.A.

At the close of our last meeting a count was taken of the number of young birds bred up to date by members present. The result was an average of 18 per member—not at all bad, considering the terrible weather we experienced at the commencement of the season. Fuller details of the breeding operations will be given as soon as they are to hand.—Reid and Maddison, secs. of the Sunderland C.B.A.

Bermondsey and District F.A.

Our members are this season in a fair way of recovery from the disasters of last year. We ourselves have 23 young Norwich Canaries on the sticks from 7 pairs (1st round), and there are some promising youngsters among them. We have also made a good start from 9 pairs in the 2nd round; all are doing well. Mr. J. Thomas has more quality than quantity in his number, and has a few promising young Norwich which are doing well. Mr. Derby is having better luck from the 2nd round than from the 1st, and has a few fine young Norwich, some in the nests and some on the sticks. Mr. Moore is, he tells us, doing badly with his Norwich Canaries. Messrs. Jessup and Ashwood have a few which are also doing well. Mr. Roney has several promising young Yorkshires, which we think will do well at the Bermondsey and Wandsworth locals. There are few others who have to report very slow progress in breeding operations.—Lupton and Jornan, hon. secs. Bermondsey and Dis. F.A.

Secretaries and Fanciers are invited to send their experiences.

Scottish British Bird and M.C.

Will secretaries of shows desirous of securing the patronage of the above club kindly note my address, writes Mr. A. W. Watson, sec., 8, Commercial Street, Leith. I shall be pleased to give all information to any intending new member.

The Wild Birds' Chief Enemy.

Around London and large provincial towns, the greatest enemy to wild birds is undoubtedly the domestic cat. If it were not for these destroying night-prowlers many of our warblers would nest in the shrubberies of the larger gardens, and the dwellers in these districts would be enchanted with the delightful melody of the Nightingale instead of the unearthly yells of grimalkin.

Hawk's Fight with a Weasel.

Several persons, according to an Irish contemporary, observed a large weasel running along the ditch. Suddenly a Hawk swooped down with lightning velocity, seized the weasel in its claws and ascended again. For fully half an hour a desperate struggle took place in the air between the weasel and the Hawk, and drops of blood were observed to fall from the deadly enemies. The weasel was noticed to make a furious charge on the Hawk, and both combatants fell heavily to the ground convenient to where the spectators stood. On reaching the ground the weasel scampered off to its hiding place, bespattered with blood. On examination the Hawk was found to be dead, its head being almost severed from its body, while its claws were covered with the flesh and blood of the weasel.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

No. 213.
A NOVEL NEST-PAN HOLDER.
Sent by J. Sparkes, 32, Piers Road, Handsworth, Birmingham.

The nest-pan holder here sketched I find a great improvement on those usually sold with pans. It is very firm and admits of no spring, and as pairing usually takes place on the side of the nest, one result of this is more fertile eggs. To make this holder, take a piece of strong wire, 31 inches long. Bend it rather sharp in the centre, then put four twists in it leaving the end (as seen in sketch) 5 inches long. Then bend the wire into a circle of 4 inches diameter, allowing a space of 2 inches at the back, where bend sharp for half an inch, then bend sharp down and cut off to suitable length. Drive two small staples into back of cage, 2 inches apart, to slip holder into, which look much neater than the usual hook. —J. Sparkes.

No. 214.
A WIRE EGG-LIFTER.
Sent by M. Harley, 165, Trafalgar Street, Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancs.

I enclose rough sketch of a wire egg-lifter, which anyone can make. There is nothing particularly novel about it, but I don't remember having seen one in your columns. It is made out of ordinary cage wire, coiled once round at the top, to form spring. I might say that you can easily regulate spring, so that it will lift the egg without any danger of breaking it. Wrap the bottom loops thickly with wool. I find this lifter very useful, as anyone having heavy work finds handling eggs rather a delicate job. The lifter will take them out of the nest, etc., quite easily, without breaking them. They can be made any length to suit. I hope this will be useful to some reader or other.—M. Harley.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds." 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

How Many Broods?

Y.Z.—It is a vexed question as to how many broods a hen should be allowed in each season. It all depends so much upon the health and vigour of the birds, the readiness to breed, and the time at which they are first mated up. One has also to consider the question of unfertile clutches, and how long the hen is in getting each brood on their own. But as a general rule two, or at most three, broods are quite sufficient in one year, and will usually prove more profitable than four or more broods one year, and perhaps not two average-sized broods in the aggregate in the next two years. If, say, a hen is mated up first week in April, goes to nest at once, and has a clutch of clear eggs, or if she only hatched one which was transferred to another parent, she may be allowed two more broods if she desires them. But if she brings a full brood and rears it, by the time she has nested and reared a second brood the season will be getting rather advanced, and the hen would be much better by resting until the moult than by being taxed with a third brood.

To Begin Feeding Young.

Tim.—You may begin to give the first broods of young a pinch of tasteless colour food in the egg-food about twice a week when they are eight weeks old; the later broods should begin to have a little in this way when six weeks old, as they will begin to moult at an earlier age than the early hatched youngsters. But there is no necessity to begin giving the food systematically until the moult is approaching. All you want is to get the blood charged with colour when the feathers are beginning to drop out, which will generally be somewhere towards the end of August. The middle of August is a good time to begin giving a little casually as a precaution. This, of course, is excepting precociously early birds, which must be looked for and treated separately.

Broken Beaks.

Geo. Bleach.—I was very glad to hear how the case of the young birds' broken beaks terminated, and thank you for remembering to send along a report, but I would have been well satisfied with a verbal description at this season. When the parcel reached me it required some moral courage to abstract the letter—to properly examine the body of the bird was out of the question. But from what I could see I am still of opinion that the bird might have fed itself when it got a little older. Many healthy birds do not feed themselves very easily at a month old. It is beyond my powers to say positively how the damage was done, but I should suspect one of the parents was the culprit. The cock is the most likely perpetrator of this sort of mischief.

Nesting Again Too Early.

W. Cottey.—Am afraid there is something radically wrong with your system. I do not think you could have met with the advice to give a three-weeks-old nestling that was "queer" a drop of glycerine in the beak and apply two drops of sweet oil to the vent in CAGE BIRDS. This sort of treatment of itself was enough to turn any such tender nestling 'queerer" than ever. I do not much care for rape seedlings as a green-food during breeding season. Lettuce, chickweed, groundsel, watercress, are all much better, given in small quantities. Lettuce you could grow in boxes or pots as easily as rape. The latter is more suitable for winter months. Feed as follows for the rest of the season, interfering with the birds as little as possible. Staple diet in seed-boxes, a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape—nothing else whilst hens are sitting, save a scrap of green-food now and then, and half a teaspoonful of egg-food once a week. When young are due, give a small quantity of chopped pure yolk; next day mix a third part of bread crumb or sponge cake in it; on the third day add another third part of crumbs and give a tiny scrap of green feed. Then give egg-food in small quantities fresh at least twice a day; ditto green-food; and when the young are a week or eight days old begin to give hemp seed—in small quantities at first, gradually increasing it for about a week, but not giving unlimited quantities until the young are at least a fortnight old, as this would only help to bring hen into breeding condition too quickly. Keep egg-food perfectly fresh, and make with one part mixed yolk of egg, and twice the bulk of bread crumb (or crushed sponge cake, or powdered plain biscuits), well mixed together. Allow baths after young are three or four days old. Keep cages scrupulously clean. The Canary seed is a very fair sample, but contains a large proportion of extraneous seeds. The hemp is poor, containing a large proportion of damaged and musty grains. The rape is not fit for caged birds. It seems to be nearly all so-called wild mustard.

Very Unbusinesslike.

O. S. Pratt.—You do not say whether the cock bird is in song or not, and the way your hen is dallying about and playing at nesting may be due either to his being out of condition and not inciting her to get on with the job, or to the other bird being a hen. If the former, the cock bird must be brought into a strong and more vigorous condition, or, better still, as the season is getting on, remove him altogether and introduce a lusty cock that is anxious for mating. If neither of these surmises is correct you can only have patience and hope for something to turn up. Give a little egg-food every day, and sprinkle it one day with a little inga, and the next with a little gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water give five drops of tincture of steel every second day for a week.

Gone Into Moult.

Lilo.—Am afraid you will not get any result this season from the hen. Perhaps the bird is being kept in a much different temperature to what she was accustomed to before she came into your possession, and this would account for the moult. A sudden chill, as from a cold draught, might also cause a few feathers to be shed. If only a few small feathers are shed give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake every day with drops of sherry mixed in it, and in the drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day, and on the alternate days four drops of tincture of steel. Continue for a fortnight, if necessary, until the feathers are no longer shed. But if the moult is general, which would begin by the long wing and tail feathers dropping first, you had better put the hen aside for next year. It will be useless trying to breed with her in that condition.

Owing to the Whitsuntide holidays, many queries have necessarily had to wait an answer until our next issue.—Editor.

A Question of Feeding.

A.W.H.—When the hen commences to lay begin to drop off the extra items you have been giving to feed up with until by the time she has been sitting a day or two you are giving a diet of three parts Canary to one part summer rape in seed hoppers. This is practically all that is required, but once a week give half a teaspoonful of egg-food, and two or three times a tiny scrap of green-food if the hen is a close sitter and the weather is warm. This last depends a good deal on the character of the hen. If addicted to stopping long off the eggs when green-food is given, do not give any, especially during cool weather, and at all times give only just a wee scrap. When eggs are due to hatch give half a teaspoonful of pure yolk chopped finely. This will suffice for the first day. Next day mix about a third part of the bulk of bread crumbs or powdered biscuits with it; give rather less, and a fresh supply in the afternoon. On third day add another third part of bread or biscuit, and begin to increase quantity as may seem necessary, but always giving fresh at least twice a day. Also begin to give a little green-food on the third or fourth day, and when the young are a week or eight days old begin to give a little hemp seed separately. If a large brood is being reared, soaked rape may also be given, separately, when the young are about a fortnight old. Be careful the latter does not turn sour, which it does very quickly in hot, sultry weather.

Brevities.

Turning the Tables (E.A.E.).—Are you quite sure the bird you suppose to be a cock is not really a hen? The fact that it started to build the nest and now sits nearly all day is, I fear, a very strong proof that there is a mistake about its sex. Your feeding is not quite correct, and you should not be giving sherry to birds without some specific object in view. Treat as advised to "O. S. Pratt," and for fuller details concerning breeding and feeding, see reply to "W. Cottey."

When to Stop Breeding (Jasper).—Any time from the middle of July onwards is the time to stop Canaries breeding. Although there may be plenty of time for a pair of birds just finishing off a brood about the middle of July to begin nesting again and rear another brood before moulting, if that pair has been mated up early and already had three nests it is the wisest plan to separate them and let them rest during the interval before moulting. If they have had only one or two nests, and appear anxious to begin again at once, they may be allowed another nest. With such exceptions the pairs should be broken up after the middle of July.

Green Food for Young (A Beginner).—Certainly give a little green food to young after they are doing for themselves, but do not overdo it. For about a fortnight green food may be withheld with advantage, as at this period the young merely bruise and chew the green, the beak not being sufficiently grown to cut it. This bruised and mashed greenstuff soon becomes stale and begins to decompose. After the first fortnight or so, however, green food may be given in limited quantities, choosing, for preference, that which is of a drying nature — chickweed, plantain stalks, shepherd's purse, etc.

Marking Young (Dee-side).—The open marking rings which can be taken off and replaced when desired, need not be put on until young are ready to be placed in flight with others. Up to this time the cage numbers and labels are quite sufficient to identify the birds, if only ordinary care is taken to avoid mixing them when handling the nursery cages. When putting rings on be careful the particulars and numbers of rings are entered in stock register at same time.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Hand-Rearing Tits and Wrens, &c

W. N. J.—Really, these hand-rearing questions get just a little tiring. I have given the information over and over again, during the last two months. Only last week (June 6) I told a correspondent how to hand rear Chaffinches, Linnets, and the like, yet you ask me the same thing. In one of the May issues, too, I dealt fully with the feeding of small insectivorous birds; see another reply this week on this point. To answer helpfully all the questions you put, would take up more than a column. You should study the articles recently published from the pens of practical fanciers. Also you should be content with a less ambitious start in bird-keeping. Wrens tax the skill of the most expert and experienced fanciers to maintain in health in captivity, and some of the Tits are equally delicate, ticklish customers. Hand-rear a few Finches, and large softbills (the Thrush, for instance), and when you have gained experience then tackle the small insectivorous species. Aphides (greenfly, or blight), small garden insects, flies, smooth caterpillars, and the like, are the best possible foods for small softbills, such as Wrens, either when mature or being hand-fed. One item of very great value you have omitted, and that is the live ants' eggs. These are to be bought during the season from certain advertisers in our columns, and I consider them par excellence for feeding or rearing purposes. Unfortunately they are not a "cheap" food; in fact, these species of birds cannot be kept cheaply. When hand-rearing Wrens and the like, the best food at first is pure yolk of hard-boiled egg (moistened with new milk when being fed to them), varied with live ants' eggs (similarly moistened), dropped into the mouths with fine forceps or tweezers. As the youngsters grow, add a little crumbled home-made sponge-cake to the egg (up to equal parts) and a salt-spoonful of Plasmon powder.

A Non-Starter.

Geordie Wall. — Yours is not the only hen Canary, I guess, which has not yet made a start. It is difficult to account for some being so early, others so late, as many things may tend to bring this about. Probably you will one day find her feverishly at work putting the home together in record time. In the meantime, let her have a few tit-bits in the seed line(maw, ruger, hemp, gold of pleasure, etc.) daily, and a little egg-bread. In her drinking water (use a glass or pot vessel only), to every two tablespoonfuls well mix twelve to eighteen drops of tincture of steel, beginning with the small dose and gradually increasing it. Of course, there are such things as barren (or non-breeding hens), but I trust you have not got hold of one of this kidney. Some young hens, too, are utter failures at their first attempt, but make first-rate breeders the second year. I had one glaring case of the latter kind myself, the hen being a Lancashire Plainhead. You did quite right to get shut of the egg-eating hen. By-the-way, it might help matters if you separated the Linnet and hen Canary by means of a wired slide.

Lost Linnet Mules.

E. Pearcey.—I expect there was some truth in what your friend told you, viz., that you had taken the hen entirely away at too early a date. Because young Mules are picking up for themselves (and once they start they seem to be continually pecking around the cage and the food vessels), it must not be too hastily assumed that they are safe to remove entirely from their mothers. In such cases, they are undoubtedly picking up part of their food, yet they still require an occasional "packing" from their "ma" to fill them out to the comfortable stage beneath the waistcoat. If they do not get this, then they are likely to "go back," as fanciers term it, and die. One thing is absolutely certain: So long as a young bird "cries" to be fed at sight of its mother, it should on no account be taken right away from her, and thrown on its own resources. As I have often said: A bird on the perch is worth two in the next round of eggs. Therefore take care of those you have got so far towards maturity. When first commencing to feed themselves, let the diet be on the lines advised "Peter Hendry," this week.

Feeding Young Mules.

Peter Hendry.—You are doing capitally. To get nine Goldfinch and four Linnet-Canary Mules hatch in the same week from your three hens is excellent. Thanks for your complimentary remarks respecting the advice I give. Pleased to help any reader I possibly can. As regards your feeding query, remember that when the Mules commence to feed themselves it is a very mistaken policy to leave off soft food as "soon as possible." The egg should be gradually left out of their diet when they are three weeks old or so, but certainly not the soft food. Give sweet biscuit, or home-made sponge-cake, soaked in new milk, and with a good pinch of Plasmon powder mixed amongst it, freely each day. Some give bread with milk, but I prefer something sweet. Give it freshly made twice or thrice a day, for it must never be sour or tainted. Condensed milk is no doubt the best to use. In addition offer canary and maw seeds, soaked summer rape, and lightly cracked hemp. A few crushed sunflower seeds should also be thrown in daily, increasing the quantity as the birds get older, and gradually dropping the hemp; at this stage also gradually discontinue the milk sop, and soaked seed, giving occasional feeds only. A few groats occasionally are relished, and a little coarse oatmeal; but the above "menu" is full enough for all practical purposes. Let them right through have plenty of quite ripe seeding green-foods. Some fanciers, I know, will not give young birds green stuff after they have taken them away from their parents. But this I consider a huge mistake. I don't believe, mind you, in stuffing them with lettuce, watercress, and the like. What they want, and what is extremely beneficial to them, and conducive to their successful rearing, is a free supply of "seeding green foods," if I may use the term, meaning the seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's purse, grass, groundsel, plantain, and the like, especially the two first-named. But don't gather it off dusty roadsides; and strip off all large, coarse leaves.

Rearing and Feeding Redstarts.

A. T. B.—Glad to know you find CAGE BIRDS a great help to you. If you refer to my columns during the last four or five weeks you will find many answers dealing fully with hand-feeding. In issue of May 9, too, I dealt at length with the feeding of small insectivorous birds like the Redstart. Here is the latter information once again, however. Briefly put, my own methods of keeping Wagtails, Nightingales, Warblers, Redstarts, Chats and similar small insectivorous birds are as follows: As a stock food powdered Osborne biscuit, four parts; best ants' eggs and dried flies, two parts each; powdered silkworm pupæ, one part; meat meal, half part, by measure. Take the quantity required of this, and mix it just crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, or finely chopped lettuce, watercress, or chickweed (use young leaves only), or cold boiled potato, varying it frequently, and adding a little water (but only a few spots) if necessary. Personally, I use one hard-boiled egg, minced fine, among the stock food of about each dozen to eighteen birds, and about three tablespoonfuls of crumbled home-made sponge-cake, with some vegetable ingredient. It is necessary, of course, to give, in addition, all the live insect food (flies, spiders, wood-lice, earwigs, small beetles, smooth caterpillars, greenfly, live ants' eggs etc.), one can possibly obtain; mealworms given regularly are indispensable. To the above stock mixture I occasionally add, after damping, a teaspoonful or two of preserved egg-flake, and, more occasionally still (practically only in the winter), a little finely scraped raw lean mutton or beef. Good cream cheese is a splendid food, too; give a little, finely chopped, and mixed, of course, with the above biscuit food, or just laid on top of it. In place of Osborne biscuits, for economy's sake, the "broken biscuits" (sweet) obtainable very cheaply from most grocers may be used. Excellent ready-made foods, too, may be bought through our columns.—See also reply to "W. N. J."

Bullfinch-Canary Couple.

Anxious.—I have quite recently given the feeding for Bullfinch-Canary (or Canary-Bullfinch) couples. Here you are again, however: Give as a stock food: Canary and teazle three parts of each, charlock, summer rape and hemp one part of each, linseed half-a-part. Vary this with daily feeds of (1) sunflower and safflower seeds; (2) niger and maw seeds mixed in equal parts; (3) a good wild seed mixture; (4) a good maker's packet Finch mixture, not giving them all at once, of course. Thistle, teazle, and hardheads, if you have them, may be given, while dandelion, shepherd's purse, chickweed, and groundsel (especially flowering and seedy) should be given freely. A dietary such as this will suit all Hybrid couples, especially those with a Bullie hen as one of the partners. The Canary hen should have a little egg-food daily (most Bullie hens like it, too). I don't care about unsweetened biscuits (such as lunch) for making egg-food. Try home-made sponge-cake, or sweet biscuit, and I'll warrant the hen will eat it. A few drops of sherry wine on it would do her good. You can do no harm by parting them for a few days, but might, indeed, do good. Let them remain in sight of each other. Do you not know that experience points to it being a very difficult matter to successfully mate the cock Bullie with a hen of another species?

Hand-rearing a Magpie.

F. A. P.—A very long answer dealing with the rearing and treatment of Magpies was given by me in issue of May 2. Here is the information in brief. Use scalded and mashed up puppy biscuits (of best quality) with which you mix hard-boiled finely-minced egg in the proportion of three parts biscuit to one of egg. You can give the youngsters mealworms, by all means, and smallish garden worms, cut into suitable pieces, should also certainly be supplied. Occasionally you can scrape a small piece of lean mutton or beef (or mince it up very finely) and give amongst the food; or a little tender cooked meat can be given. Personally, however, I fight shy of meat as much as possible, for I am certain it upsets the stomach of most birds (sets up diarrhœa), especially when much is used raw. I prefer boiled or stewed or raw rabbit flesh to all other, when obtainable. Mix a good big pinch of fine grit amongst the food now and again, or about half a teaspoonful of powdered cuttlefish bone. You can give the birds a drink of plain water after each meal, if you like, and you can please yourself about adding ants' eggs to the stock food.

A "Linnet Turned White."

Reader of "C.B."—Your letter hardly gives me sufficient information. You should have stated exactly how white the Linnet is, for on this depends its value. A pied Linnet (with a mixture of white and brown feathers) may be worth from 7/6 to perhaps 30/-; but the latter figure only if it is very light indeed. A Linnet with just a few light feathers is of no particular value (such are quite common), and one which may be described as "half-and-half" is not worth a great deal. To stand a good chance on the show bench in a class of rare-feathered birds, a Linnet must be entirely white (when it is of considerable value) or very near it. Just an average pied specimen stands no chance in good competition. As regards the class for it, I could not tell without seeing the Stockton schedule. And if there is no special class provided, then it depends on the judge. In other words, many judges will not accept rare-feathered birds in competition with ordinary plumaged specimens, but some let them take their chance. Under the N.B.B. and M. Club, they are only allowed to compete in classes specially provided for Albino, etc., birds.

Brevities.

Smell of Paint, etc. (Novice).—If the smell of paint is very strong in a room it most certainly is harmful to birds. A good stock mixture for Linnets now is: Canary and teazle three parts each, summer rape and charlock one part each, linseed half a part. The usual tit-bits in addition. For the ailing bird, stir half a teaspoonful of dandelion juice (from the chemist) in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, fresh daily, for three or four days.

Starling Ailing (Alec).—Get an ounce of sulphate of soda from a chemist, and dissolve as much as will just cover a shilling in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Give this fresh daily for two days; then two more doses on alternate days. Use glass or pot vessel only. Probably the food is not nutritious enough; add some fine crissel and some crushed dog biscuit. Moisten with hot water, and give when cold. Starlings also want plenty of ripe fruit, and a good supply of live food (blackbeetles, for one thing are cheap and very excellent.) See reply to "F.W.B.," issue May 16th.

Sexing Nightingales (Anxious).—Sexing Nightingales is a very difficult prob'em for novices, as cock and hen are practically exactly alike in plumage, though on comparison the cock is generally seen to be lighter (more silvery coloured) on the throat. The cock, however, is, as a rule, appreciably the bigger bird, with a bolder look and carriage, and a longer, flatter head when viewed in profile—not very helpful points for a beginner. At this time of the year, however, all recently-caught birds can be accurately sexed by their vents, in the same way as Canaries when in breeding condition (this applies to other species besides 'Gales).

Swelled Joints (W.E.P.).—Take the perches out of the young hybrid's cage, and bed it on peat-moss litter, or coarse-cut pine sawdust, or cocoanut fibre (from the florists). Steep the legs twice daily in strong whiskey and water; made just comfortably warm. Afterwards dry gently, and anoint the legs gently, using finger and thumb, with a little Zambuk, or Elliman's, or other good make of embrocation. Give the bird soft-food daily in each teaspoonful of which has been well mixed five or six drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. Weakness is the cause, I should say.

Food for Skylark (X.Y.Z.).—In our issue of May 23rd a long answer appears in this column giving the correct treatment for a Skylark. If you cannot turn this up, drop me a postcard, and I will repeat the information then given.

Goldie Off Song (Troubled).—Try your Goldie with dandelion juice, as recommended "Novice" this week. If this does not put him right, write me again. Opposition ought only to make him sing the louder, if in health.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Birds for Exhibition.

"H.O."—I fear for the sum you name your choice is rather limited, and that you must confine yourself to the class for common Waxbills, etc. Even with British birds and Canaries you would not have much chance in getting good and uncommon stock for the show bench for that amount, unless you are adept at getting the birds into condition. However, the following have all been in the money at recent London shows: Diamond Sparrows, Queen Whydahs, Gouldian Finches, White Java Sparrows, Zebra and St. Helena Waxbills, and Blue-breasted Waxbills. But you have a sporting chance with almost any species, providing it is well staged and in the very finest condition—that is, steady and tight and silken in plumage. For the smaller exhibitions, where you get two classes, viz., large and small, you must get something showy and in very fine condition. For the small class, say a Tanager or Sugar Bird, for insectivorous, a Diamond and any of those named above for the seed-eaters. For the large class, a showy and uncommon Parrakeet or Lorikeet would stand best chance—say a King, a Red-collar, or Blue Mountain Lorikeet. But I fancy any of these three latter would more than swallow the amount you wish to spend. All those named for London shows would be probable breeders in a roomy box cage with the end containing nest-box partially screened—size of cage 2½ by 1 by 1½ feet high. If you wish to buy ordinary birds, and get them into condition yourself, a start should be made at once, and I should advise seeing the birds, if possible, and getting those in fair plumage and as fit as possible, even at a little higher figure than ordinary rates.

Queen Parrakeet.

M.C.—Keep her nostrils clear by dabbing them with glyco-thymoline; use a camel-hair brush, well cleanse it, and use a fresh portion of the solution for each occasion. I should advise fomenting or bathing the region of the eye with a warm decoction of camomile flowers, dabbing the plumage as dry as possible with a soft cloth afterwards. While it must have fresh air, this bird must be kept as warm as possible till things improve with it. Its bowels must be kept moving freely, but its voidings should not be watery loose; also the chemical food must be kept up as already directed. The diet is very suitable, and a little boiled maize under the circumstances quite right if it will eat it. As the bird appears to have a sore mouth, get from your chemist a small box of honey and borax and anoint the mouth with this twice a day. A camel-hair brush is as good as anything to use for the purpose. Hope to soon hear of an improvement.

Amazon Unwell.

"Shoi M—".—Give one or two doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, and put bird on a course of Parrish's Chemical Food—for directions as to quantities, etc., see other replies. Diet as under: Seed mixture as staple, two parts each Canary and oats and one part each wheat, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds, well mix, and keep a supply continuously in the cage. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. When it is a little better you can give it with safety such as ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts, green-food (lettuce, etc.); keep a piece of cuttlefish, grit, and water continually in the cage. While the bird is weak, give a little boiled maize every other day, or even daily if it cares for it, but it must be made fresh each day, as it soon turns sour and the food vessel kept strictly clean, and care exercised that no stale pieces collect in corners of cage tray.

Amazon Out of Condition.

A.H.M.—Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk sops, or any kind of animal food whatever. Give two or three doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, and put it on a course of Parrish's Chemical Food—for quantity, etc., see replies to other correspondents. Diet: Seed mixture—two parts each Canary and oats, and one part each wheat, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds; well mix and always keep a supply in cage. While out of condition it would be the better for a little boiled maize, dropping about eight or ten drops of the chemical food over same. Note: boiled maize only keeps fresh one day, the food vessel should be scalded out daily, and care exercised not to leave any stale bits about. The following items are perfectly wholesome for an Amazon, and give ample range to vary its diet: ripe fruit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), green-food (lettuce, green peas, etc., as in season), plain biscuit, little boiled potato (dry), and there should be a continuous supply of cuttlefish and grit in its cage. The bird, which is a Blue-fronted Amazon, is very much out of condition, and its plumage will become normal as it recovers strength.

Naming a Parrot.

H.E.P.—(1) It is the Rose-breasted or Roseate Cockatoo, and is a native of Australia. It is a noisy species, and has not much merit as a talking species in this country, but it has capacity for speech, as in its native country it is highly spoken of in this respect. (2) Most Parrots are noisy at meal-times; they want to share in the good things going. Table scraps are not good for them. The difficulty is easily got over by having a little of something wholesome they are fond of to hand, and a little given from time to time keeps them quiet. The covering is quite legitimate, and should lessen the evil in time. Parrots are mostly intelligent, and recognise it as a punishment. I consider they are better covered up at night, but the major portion of the top of cage should be left uncovered for ventilation. Possibly it is moulting; the renewal of a bird's plumage is always a great strain upon its system, and if in low condition at the time it took place, it would feel the strain more, and decidedly show signs of weakness and illness. (3) Diet: Canary and oats two parts of each, and one part each wheat, dari, hemp, and sunflower seeds; well mix and keep a supply continuously in the cage. Also give plain biscuit, dry crust household bread, nuts, ripe fruit, and green-food. Regular supplies of cuttlefish, grit and water must also be kept up. (4, 5, and 6) Possibly the paper is responsible for some of the mischief, and the beer mixture has, I fear, exaggerated it, but I hope much harm has not been done. Get from your chemist a bottle each of Dinneford's Magnesia and Parrish's Chemical Food. Give three or four doses (one teaspoonful in the drinking water) of the magnesia, with a two or three days' interval between each. When not giving the magnesia, and also for the next month at least, make the drinking water the colour of pale port wine with the chemical food.

King Parrakeet Weak on Legs.

Waterton.—I should give this bird several doses (one teaspoonful in the drinking water) of Dinneford's Magnesia, with two or three days between each, so long as its voidings do not become watery-loose; also in between well colour drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue for some time. I should well examine bird's claws, and if any of them are in-grown, I should largely attribute the trouble to that. In such case they must be cut at any risk. Also till there is an improvement I should keep its perch low down, so that its tail only just misses cage bottom. Also, if you can handle the bird without distressing it, I should advise rubbing in a little Elliman's Embrocation. If in the cutting of the nails, any part of the foot should be made to bleed, lightly touching the wound with Friar's Balsam will check this. Prevent the bird pecking at it for a few minutes, as the Balsam stings a little when first applied; but this soon passes away. Examine the bird's breast-bone, and if this appears very sharp through the skin, it is probable the bird is in a debilitated condition, and you had better make its diet as nourishing as possible.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary Hen (F. Turner).—Septic inflammation of liver and lungs—i.e., "blood poisoning." Yes, it is an infectious condition.

Crested Canary (Ajax).—Septicæmia or blood poisoning. I assume this bird has not been in a healthy condition for some considerable time, so that its value, which you inquire about, must have been nil, although it possessed that desirable quality and quantity of feather which should have made it worth a pound or two.

Budgerigar (Budgey).—Chronic liver disease. This bird and all others having blue nostril-cores are cocks.

Roller Canary (J. Jones).—Inflammation of lungs, liver, and bowels, I fear of a septic character. Wash all sand trays or cage floors with boric acid solution, one teaspoonful to a pint of hot water.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Photograph (T. Harrison).—We are much obliged to you for sending us this excellent photograph.

Paper (H. T. Lucas).—Thanks for your kindness. We will try to utilise this paper in an early issue.

By Post (Yorkie).—We are much obliged to you for the suggestion, but we do not see our way to depart from the present custom. For replies by post the fee is only sixpence in cases of illness.

Dead Parrot (A. A. Dunbar).—We are making enquiries into this matter. Possibly it has been inadvertently overlooked.

Address (E. S. Lugg).—Letter has been duly addressed and forwarded.

The result of our recent VOTING COMPETITION will be announced next week.

POPLAR AND DIS. C.B.S.

At the last meeting held on May 28, we were honoured with a lecture, entitled "General Culture of Cage Birds," by Mr. J. Robson. He dealt at great length with the different varieties of Canaries, and impressed upon us the importance of selection in breeding as the royal road to success. He went fully into the best methods to adopt in Hybrid breeding, and the class of bird to select for the purposes. He also gave some very instructive hints to those who keep British Birds for exhibition, on the methods of feeding same. At the close many questions were asked, which were answered by Mr. Robson. A hearty vote of thanks to him ended a very interesting evening. Two new members were proposed, and 30 signed the Attendance Book. Will members please turn up in full force at next meeting on 25th June, to hear Mr. Allan Silver lecture on British Birds. — H. W. COOK, hon. sec.

HOUSE'S
Price ONE SHILLING. Post Free 1.2.
Superbly illustrated by the Champion Canary Artist Mr. H. NORMAN. EVERY BIRD DEPICTED IS A VERITABLE MODEL, and shows the breeder what to aim for. Some idea of the popularity of this Practical Manual may be gathered from the fact that under the title of "The British Canary," it has passed its Third Edition, entering upon a Fourth Edition of 5,000 copies under the new title of "HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL." MR. HOUSE has thoroughly revised and brought this work up-to-date and incorporated a chapter on the "Roller or Singing Canary."

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANOTHER CANARY-BULLFINCH HYBRID BRED.

SIR,—Perhaps this might interest some of your many readers. On the 24th of May I had a Canary-Bullie hatched. I gave it to a Canary to rear, but it only lived three days. I have a cock Bully feeding a hen Chaffinch, but as yet there are no signs of building.

F. MASCALL.

A NEW SOCIETY FOR STAMFORD AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—A cage bird association has been formed at Stamford, in Lincolnshire, and the first open show has been fixed for December 10 next. Mr. W. P. Barnes (Grantham) has been elected as judge. We shall be glad to receive any hints that members of the Fancy may care to give us. I have been elected secretary and my address is 39, Broad-street, Stamford. A. W. LUDLOW.

BIRD CATCHING.

SIR,—Will you kindly publish this letter in CAGE BIRDS, which I wish every success and think a most excellent paper? I would like to ask "Constant Reader" to kindly give more particulars concerning the wire and net spring traps spoken of last week. It is hard to understand how he sets them, to one who has never seen them. Could he also say how they are to be made? Still, it is the correct setting, I feel sure, which is the most important. I am sure we are all thankful to him for the hints and good advice he has already given us. WELSHMAN.

AN ARGUMENT ABOUT TEAZLE SEED.

SIR,—I have had an argument here (Limerick) with a friend over teazle seed. My friend says it is got from the Scotch thistle, and that this is cultivated. I hold that it is not obtained from any of the thistle plants, and that it is obtained from a different plant altogether. I have an old teazle head, and I have also read all the articles which appeared in CAGE BIRDS dealing with wild plants and seeds (I have the number in which the two thistle heads which are generally used are depicted) and I cannot convince myself that teazle is cultivated thistle. Can any reader give an explicit answer through your columns? E. BUTLER.

DANDELION & YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—"Tempus Omnia Revelat," in writing on this subject, says he has "often wondered if the fanciers who don't like dandelion, and who decry its value most, are those who live in large towns," and further says it is perhaps a case of "sour grapes." Although I did not intend writing again on the subject, as these remarks appear to refer to my former letter, I feel I should relieve the writer's anxiety and prevent a misunderstanding by informing him that so far as I am concerned I never yet had the—shall I say?—misfortune to live in a town of any kind, neither large nor small, for a single week in my life. There is probably not a single day throughout the year but one could gather a barrow-load of dandelion within a radius of twenty yards from my house door. Therefore "Tempus Omnia Revelat" must see that in my case, at least, his remark about "sour grapes" falls exceedingly flat. I cannot imagine any self-respecting person writing down and decrying an article of food simply because they have not had the opportunity of using it themselves, and it is hardly a fancier-like spirit in your correspondent to suggest such a thing.

"AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS AND CAGES"
Is the title of
CAGE BIRDS' LATEST HANDBOOK.
It is written by that well-known fancier, Mr. H. Norman ("Cage Birds" Artist-in-Chief) who has illustrated it with a wealth of helpful drawings. It also contains 10 lovely full-page photographic plates.
It must be on every bird-lover's book-shelf who desires to thoroughly understand the proper Building, Fitting and Management of Aviaries, Bird-rooms and Cages.

IS THE HOOPOE A BRITISH BIRD?

SIR,—I note in CAGE BIRDS that some correspondence is going on about whether the Hoopoe is a British Bird. I beg to enclose you a list of British birds which I have had by me for many years, and which I came across to-day. When looking over for something else in it, I find that the Hoopoe is mentioned. Should you like to reprint this list (en bloc), it may prove of advantage to some of the British bird fanciers.

PROPOSED CAGE BIRD SHOW FOR HALTON.

SIR,—At a committee meeting held at Halton, under the presidency of the Rev. S. Proudfoot eleven classes were arranged for the proposed cage bird show to be held at Halton. Members' subscription was fixed at 2s. 6d. and the judge suggested was Mr. W. Mundell, who has since consented. The show will be held at Halton on November 7th.

W. SAUL, Hon. Sec., Rectory Cottage, Halton, Lancs.

IS IT A RECORD?

SIR,—I have a common hen Canary (green) which has just laid a nest of seven eggs, all of which were laid consecutively. She commenced on Friday, the 29th May, and finished on Thursday, the 4th June. I should be pleased to know if there is anything special in this—I mean, is it a record lay, or does it occur often? I shall watch coming numbers with interest for the replies of readers. I must say that in CAGE BIRDS I have found a great deal of most useful information.

SON OF THE ROCK.

PROGRESS OF THE SCOTCH FANCY CANARY.

SIR,—The Scotch Fancy Canary is in increasing demand this season, and it looks as if the £100 purchase at Paisley New Year show has created fresh interest in the breed. I have myself heard of fanciers arranging to sell out of other kinds to get a start with the Scotch Fancy. A right good pair is worth a dozen pair of Norwich or Border Fancy, in my opinion, and I expect to hear of yet more new Scotch Fancy breeders entering the fold. They take no more to feed than common Canaries, and the difference in selling price more than repays the initial outlay.

AULD REEKIE.

A STRANGE NESTING PLACE.

SIR,—On my visiting the Hindley Field Colliery, near Wigan, to-day in pursuit of my business my attention was called to a Starling's nest containing three young ones. It was situated underneath the iron plating on which the coal is landed when it is wound up out of the pit (commonly called in Lancashire the pit brow). The plating is about ¼th of an inch thick, and over it about 1,000 small wagons containing from 5 to 7 cwts. of coal each are run every day and quite a large number of men, women, and boys are working all day long. Then there is the noise of the winding, the working of the hoist and screen and the continuous vibration of the pit brow. And to make the matter more strange the plate is cracked right over the nest. I have read of many a strange nesting place in your interesting paper but I think if your readers could only see this they would be inclined to say that it is one of the most remarkable. I was pleased to learn that the management had given strict orders that the nest was not to be disturbed. W. RIDGE.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a small space in answer to Mr T. Keegan. The first part of his letter I do not take any notice of, but the part where he says: "It was not at the general meeting we wanted to withdraw from the C.B.U., but at the matched pair show." Now, T. K., if you read my letter again you will see I did not say "we wanted," which means the society (yourself included), I said "it was proposed," which is a different thing altogether. As to the mistake re meeting, I am sorry if I was misinformed. I apologise and beg to say: "The matched pair show," which soon puts this little matter right. What I wanted to point out was the selfishness of T. Keegan. He wants to abolish the C.B.U., but does not want his society to start first! If as you say, Mr. Keegan, the C.B.U. is of no use, why belong to it? Why does not your society be the pioneer and sever its connection? Do you want someone else to do your dirty work?—as in your last letter you confessed you proposed that your society should become affiliated to the C.B.U. Then Mr. Keegan says: "Perhaps this know-all person will inform us what is the use of the C.B.U.?" Well, this beats cock-fighting. It is evident you don't know what you are talking about. Why did you propose that your society should affiliate, if the C.B.U. is of no use? But there, I may just as well tell him, as he is practically a novice in the fancy, and does not know the working of societies. In the first place your society, T. K., has benefited through the C.B.U., inasmuch as two societies in this district were refused licenses on the same date as yours had its last open show. The benefit your society derived can easily be seen by looking at the catalogue; a good many prizes went to the towns to which the licenses were not granted. Now suppose there had been no C.B.U. your society would have been bound to have suffered, with two more shows in the same district on the same day. Again, had you been an old fancier, you would have known that dishonourable practices were carried on more in the past than at the present time. Fanciers borrowed and lent birds, and if they were found out they were merely disqualified, and perhaps stopped from showing at the particular show where the disqualification took place. But they were allowed to show at other shows. Now the C.B.U. puts a stop to this. If a fancier gets disqualified he is not allowed to show at any fixture held under C.B.U. rules. Therefore fanciers are more particular knowing that they cannot show if found out. Here is another thing the C.B.U. are responsible for. There was always dissatisfaction as to what constituted a novice, and the C.B.U. has made this clear, and all novices are on the same footing. You must remember, T. Keegan, that the world was not made in a day, and that the railway companies are vast monopolies, from whom it takes, shall we say, the whole house of Parliament to get a hearing! I have no doubt that if the C.B.U., in conjunction with other bodies of fanciers, keeps pegging away at them, we shall have cheaper rates sooner or later. Again, are you aware, Mr. Keegan, that we have other cage bird unions in England? There is the Yorkshire Union, doing good work in Yorkshire, and the Welsh Cage Bird Club in Wales, doing good work there. Why can't we also have a union? Mr. Keegan says that if I look in the "Show Dates Fixed" column, I will find Weston-super-Mare and our show are not the only ones that clash. Well, I have looked, and can't find two other societies in the district clashing. In conclusion, it proves that T. Keegan has no knowledge of the working of the C.B.U., and probably only wrote for the purpose of seeing his name in print. Not wishing to have a free advertisement myself (I will pay in the prepaid columns when I do, and get my money's worth), I again sign myself— ONE WHO KNOWS.

SIR,—With reference to the Cage Bird Union, may I be permitted to give my opinion? I think it time it was wiped out, as instead of furthering the interests of fanciers and societies, it must keep them back, for the fancier who keeps a few exhibition birds will not be dictated to as to where he shall show them, and consequently he will not join a society that is affiliated. I think if you could attach a voting paper in your valuable CAGE BIRDS the only persons to vote for it would be the officials who demand our money, for which we get no benefit or consideration. I for one would be grateful to be rid of the hindrance to my hobby. MARTIN COOK.

[We regret that we are unable to fall in with our correspondent's suggestion.—EDITOR.]

Cage Bird Food.

Mr. R. A. BROWN, Sec. of Glasgow and West of Scotland Norwich, Mule, British and Foreign Bird Club, writes:—

"I have used your Cod Liver Oil Food and C. and C. B. Food, totally supplanting the usual Egg Food, these last two seasons and have great faith in its nourishing properties.

"I have successfully reared over fifty young birds on it and find its easy manipulation and handiness a decided boon in the bird room."

WHERE DOES THE DANDELION SEED GROW?

SIR,—Can any of the numerous readers of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, answer for me the following question: Does dandelion grow on the same stem as the yellow flower or does the seed grow on a separate stem altogether? Any information will greatly oblige. ROCHDALE.

THE BREEDING OF HYBRIDS.

SIR,—Will your readers let us know what headway they are making with Hybrid breeding? This is a department full of special interest, and I am sure you will gladly give publicity to the results of Hybrid breeders, as you do to those of Canary breeders. I have myself Bullfinches building nests, and will advise you later how I succeed.

WHAT IS "QUALITY" LINNET SONG?

SIR,—I should like to occupy a little space in your valuable paper with a view to getting a better understanding as to quality and quantity singing in Linnet singing contests. I had occasion to be at Mill Stone Hotel, Wigan, the other Saturday, where there was a contest, and for the life of me I cannot fathom it out how one man could enter what he calls a quality bird. This same bird has not sung more than three seconds of a run (which many men would call "pitching") yet has obtained the prize for it. Now, if this is what is called quality singing, I think it is time we came to some understanding through the columns of this paper. I think that a quality bird is one that sings the natural song, and not one that has to be taught with a German Roller, which I contend is anti-natural and far from being quality. I hope this will meet with some fanciers' fair consideration so that we can get in that position which will be fair to all, and one that we can all understand.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE GREENFINCH.

SIR,—"The Threepenny Green-bird" may be considered a singular name to apply to an exhibition bird, and those who admire the Greenfinch may perchance somewhat resent the application; but it is not more singular than truthful. Many of the most successful Greenfinches on the show benches to-day have cost no more than threepence at first hand. Some cost even less than that. It is about the cheapest bird on the market, and none are estimated at a lower value. Save, perhaps, the Chaffinch and the Linnet, there is no other bird so widely known and so frequently kept, particularly in the poorest portions of crowded cities, as the common "Green-bird," or as it is often called the "Green Linnet"; but it should be more correctly styled, the Greenfinch. The Greenfinch is perhaps even better known in city slums than is the common Sparrow on the country housetop, for in many cases so poor are the folk and so undesirable their surroundings that even the Sparrow will not dwell there. So real, however, in the breasts of the very poorest of residents in the worst of slums is that touch of sympathy and gentle kindness, that the Green-bird" is looked upon in thousands of instances as a friend, and is often the recipient of a great deal more love and care than the slum-dwellers bestow upon their fellow men and women. The best places upon the wall of a grimy room, and the spots where chance gleams of sunshine are to be found are reserved for the "Green-bird." True, slum ideas of sanitation are somewhat primitive, and the needs of the bird, as regards sufficient cage room are not and cannot be liberally considered; but there is a strangely-tender kindness shown to these little, feathered pets that is touching in the extreme. Father has his "Green-bird," and it is often the case that the one half hour which he has is devoted to the cleaning-out and feeding of the little, feathered prisoner. The cripple child often has its "Green-bird"—a veritable companion of solitude; a Canary is beyond the reach of pocket. The seamstress has her "Green-bird" to hop and twitter sympathy the while, when she wears away her eyesight at needle and shuttle. One and all love the "Green-bird"—the little, sombre-feathered bird that was purchased, may be, for a penny or, at the most, threepence in the "Row," when its owner went for a holiday there; or was carried home in triumph as a present for a sick child. It is exceedingly improbable that the late Dr. Bradburn, kindliest of men, ever looked on this side of the question when he declared—"The Greenfinch is another plain-looking bird that I consider not worth keeping, especially when one considers what a common bird it is." Many thousands of Greenfinches are now kept in captivity, and are well cared for and well fed. The Greenfinch is essentially a poor man's bird, because it can be purchased so cheaply. But it is something else; it is an apt illustration of the extremes. Prices of exhibition Greenfinches, more often than not, are ruled by conditions and circumstances. Buying and selling are two different things, and wealth is given to either by reason of the need or otherwise of the bird bought or sold. While the Greenfinch is often sold in bird shops at 2d. and 3d., good specimens, from the point of view of exhibition birds, are worth anything from £1 to £10. Although the Greenfinch is looked upon as a common, cheap bird by many, it has some unrivalled qualities of colour and beauty of plumage when these are studied closely. The strangely beautiful tints of green that bedeck its feathers are captivating when their excellence is fully perceived. The exquisitely soft, close, wax-like fit of the feathers is remarkably striking to a close observer. Their feathering fits them as closely as that of a Java Sparrow. The Greenfinch is a hardy bird, which can be hand-reared from the nest, if taken at a suitable age, say, when about ten or twelve days old. But there has come over the Fancy a somewhat new and better way. It has been found that the birds hatched and reared in captivity often do better than those reared in the field and caught and tamed. We have heard an "old hand" amongst British birds declare that "he knows that egg-food etc., supplied while the Canary is rearing young Greenfinches builds up the youngsters to a much larger size than the wild ones attain to." Be that as it may, aviary or cage-reared Finches are certainly tamer than those that are caught. When youngsters are hand-reared and can pick up they can be fed on crushed hemp seed for a while and then given Canary, rape, and a limited quantity of hemp. They are also very fond of sunflower seeds, and there are many wild seeds they love such as plantain, shepherd's purse, etc. The Greenfinch is fond of ripe fruit and will take half-ripe seed buds. Some authorities declare that the young are fed on insects, but this, others say is a mistake. If anyone desires to carry out the process of hand-rearing it can be done by soaking some rape seed and mixing it with hard-boiled egg. It is best to get the young to crack their own seeds as soon as possible. This can be induced by giving them soaked seeds whole, gradually substituting unsoaked seeds. Greenfinches need sharp grit and plenty of it, and are particularly fond of a bath. Some men colour-feed the Greenfinch for show, but we fancy there is a growing feeling that the beauty of colour of the bird is spoilt by this process, and there is an inclination to support the retention of the natural as opposed to the artificial colour. With this idea few will quarrel. The Greenfinch is a poor songster, but a gentle, tame, good companion and pet. G. G.

THE LITTLE OWL.

SIR,—This year there has been a large number of nests of the Little Owl found in the Ramsey district. In some of the first nests in April only two eggs were found and in others four eggs. A large number of eggs have been taken by the nesting boys. When only two in the nest, they would jump to the conclusion that they were pigeons, but when there were four, they knew they were, as they call them, "Cat Owls." Some nests that I have heard of had two young in, about a week old, and two more eggs. It appears that in some of the nests the birds keep on laying during the time they are sitting, for in one nest were found four young of different ages and two fresh eggs. One old bird was caught on the nest, but by good luck I managed to get it from the boy, and I sent it away to a Naturalist who has done much to preserve these grand birds, to turn out in his park. Had I not have seen the boy, the bird would probably have been killed in some way, as the "Act" is not taken much notice of here. I am afraid that very few of the first nests have escaped destruction from the boys, for during the first part of the nesting season, they are very keen indeed on nests of any kind. But the craze is now getting over and most of the birds will get a good chance. I have just heard of nearly a dozen nests (both eggs and young) of the Little Owl which have been found, but they are not close to the town, rather too far away for the boys to seek, and I hope they will escape the fate of those I have mentioned. I have not as yet heard of so many nests this year as last, neither have I hear of so many young being taken. Still, there is yet plenty of time, as it was quite the end of July when I saw 17 young and the old one in a little basket last year, taken in one night, by one man. That same man has now taken scores of these most interesting birds (hundreds would be nearer the mark), but they do come to a "good end," for they are brought up by one who is a naturalist, and who sends to some dealer who supplies gentlemen with them to turn out on their estates. It is only during the last four or five years that they have become so numerous in this district: but I have my fears that they are now going down again, so many have been taken. I have done all I can to get them better preserved.

Among the British Birds of North Hants.

By J. S. CLARKE.

A Lecture before the City and Suburban A.C.B. on April 13th.

Whilst we are in climbing humour, we will take a look at the Jackdaw's nest in a tree not far off; the sticks protruding from a hole in the trunk, some 30ft. up proclaim its whereabouts. This nest contains eggs of the same number we found in the Rook's, bluish white in colour, with dark spots. You will find these birds and nests fairly plentiful, but as we have a lot of ground to cover, we must not stop to examine duplicates where they are at all out of our reach. There are hundreds of acres of the park that are free to the public, but it is the reserved portion, known as the spring woods, which attracts us most. They are of wide extent, surrounded by ditch and wall in part, the remainder by high oak fences, wide grassy avenues, lined on either side with box rhododendrons and other evergreens; the remainder is full of beech, elm, oak, chestnut, pine, and fir trees, many of them of great height and thickness, a dense undergrowth of hazel bramble, and holly bush, besides the myriads of primroses, violets, bluebells, and anemonies, which complete the picture.

Wood Pigeons and Turtle Doves are here in number, and we speedily examine the nests and eggs of each, two in number, and pure white, showing plainly through the frail platform of sticks that does duty as a nest. A wild Pheasant (I use the term wild, to distinguish betwixt that and those that are bred like barndoor fowls, under a hen), rises up with a startling whirr, leaving exposed eight or nine olive brown eggs, lying on the bare ground. In one of the holly bushes we next find what I consider the prettiest nest I have ever seen,—a Long-Tailed Tit's, oval in shape, covered with sparkling lichens, thickly lined with feathers, and the eggs, eight or ten in number, white, pink-spotted, a description that applies to the other two varieties of Tits I have met with.

Some Nests Disclosed.

The Greater, also the Lesser Whitethroat, are not at all uncommon, and we have probably laid bare the nest of the former that was hidden by a bed of nettles in forcing our way through the undergrowth. The nest is a thin fragile construction of dry grass stalks, and the eggs are of a mottled, dirty, pale green colour. The latter we find higher up in a bramble, a smaller egg, white, with dark and light brown spots. Farther on, skilfully fastened underneath the bough of a spruce fir, we find a Golden-Crested Wren's nest, with four or five tiny eggs, creamy white, with dark yellow clouding at the larger end.

Emerging on the far side of the spring woods, we make our way out of the park, on through the village of Winslade, Herriard Park, another large estate lying on our left, to Herriard Common, in one corner of which I found several years in succession quite a colony of Bullfinches, and we shall, in all probability, have found several of their nests on this occasion in the thorn bushes, with which the common is covered. A rough-looking nest composed of sticks, roots, and moss, the eggs four or five in number, of a pale blue tint, spotted and streaked dark red. In a hole in a beech some distance up, just on the edge of the common, I found on one occasion, two young Barn Owls, and an egg, that I concluded, at the time, was unfertile—but I have learned since, as probably many here are aware, that these birds lay their eggs in instalments, consequently, it is not an uncommon occurrence to find eggs and young in the same nest. The young birds on that occasion we took, and a friend of mine reared them; he also found a place for the egg in his cabinet.

From here, across the fields, and through a combination of copses and woodland, in which we shall have found several Magpies' nests; in fact, we could not well miss seeing them. Getting a view of their eggs is a different matter, as after a stiff climb, you will get some nasty scratches from the thorny sticks, of which the dome of the nest is composed. Thereabouts I have often found their nests in a thick thorn bush, and on one occasion lodged on the side of a chalk pit; usually with five or six eggs, and frequently seven, pale, bluish-white in colour, freely spotted with grey greenish-brown of varying shades.

Nests of the Kestrel and Sparrow Hawk.

We now come to Hurst Copse and Parr Copse. In these two woods or copses, I have found more Crows, Kestrels and Sparrow-Hawks than in all other districts put together, and I am compelled to add, have taken a great many more than I ought to have done. Of course, I have read that the Sparrow and Kestral Hawk frequently build in deserted Crow's nests, but when we found Hawk's eggs we took it for granted it was a Hawk's nest. However, we got convinced at last (I say we, as my inseparable companions on these expeditions were the two sons of a neighbouring farmer, a schoolmaster of mine, and a village lad, who used to join us at Herriard, I may say the finest climber I ever saw); it happened in this way. On one occasion I had climbed up to a Crow's nest, situate in the fork of a tree some distance up, and found it contained but one egg only. "Take it," those at the bottom of the tree shouted, "she (meaning the Crow) won't mind." This was done. On our next journey, on reaching the same tree, we each wanted the other to climb up, and see if the Crow had provided any more spoil for us, in the way of eggs. To cut the story short, the village lad swarmed up, and on reaching the nest, shouted "two, Kestrels," which were duly confiscated. After that, whenever we robbed a Crow of her eggs, which was on every occasion we found one, the tree was noted, and climbed on our subsequent visits, and a great many Kestrel's and Sparrow Hawk's eggs came to our share in this way. Very handsome eggs they are, the former all red, with dispersed markings, the latter ash colour, with irregular red blotches.

I omitted to mention that the Crow's eggs are of a greenish colour, mottled light brown. I may say that our usual method of getting these eggs safely to the ground was for one of those at the foot of the tree to take off his jacket and spread it out inside uppermost, the others assisting to hold in position; the climber then laying along a convenient branch, dropped the egg safely into the coat below. I have seen this done a great many times, often from a good height, and I never knew an egg to break that was caught in this fashion.

I may mention, too, that the village lad I speak of is to-day one of the most skilful poachers in this district, and what he does not know of fur and feather and woodcraft is not knowledge. And let me make a confession; I have known many poachers most of them hard working men, and in regular employment, who under different circumstances would probably be eminent naturalists, and perchance have the honour of reading a paper before the members of the City and Suburban A.C.B. Be that as it may, whether they poach for sport, and it is exciting sport (by one who knows), or to supplement their incomes, they know the risk of capture—and the penalty.

At and Around Basing Castle.

The other and shorter route, on which we shall find the remainder of the birds and nests I have mentioned, is along the canal bank to old Basing. In, or close to, the swamp on our left, we shall find the nest of the wild duck. These eggs I need not describe. Coot, with stone-coloured eggs, with small dark brown spots; Moorhen, with eggs of richer colour, and spots of redder brown. The little Grebe or Dabchick: the nest is a mass of dead, wet rushes, the eggs, intended to be white, are invariably stained and dirty; this bird covers up its eggs, and we used to get a long stick and uncover them, not wishing to labour for nothing.

We will have a look round the ruins of Basing Castle. Part of the outer wall and the old Pigeon house and gateway remain standing. I have a photograph with me, showing the gateway. Passing under this gateway into the park, the ruins of the old castle are immediately in front of us. It was built by Sir William Paulet, first Marquis of Winchester, and during the Civil War it was invested by Sir William Waller, one of Cromwell's generals. With 7,000 men at his command, he made several attempts to storm the castle, but was repulsed on each occasion by the gallant Royalists within. Cromwell himself at last directed the attack, and after a furious bombardment, the garrison capitulated on the 14th of October, 1643, having killed upwards of 2,000 Roundheads during the siege, the castle was looted and set on fire, and nothing remains except the subterranean vaults, in addition to the items previously mentioned.

The visitor to this old-world spot at the present time would find it difficult to associate it with the stirring scenes it witnessed during the Civil War. Speaking for myself, or rather letting Goldsmith speak for me:—

"How often have I paused on every charm;
The sheltered cot, the cultivated farm,
The never failing brook, the busy mill,
The decent church that topped the neighbouring hill."

This accurately describes the village of old Basing in the year of grace 1908. The moat that surrounded the old castle, now without water, and thickly overgrown with thorn bush, will appeal most strongly to birdy men, and here we shall find the nests of Greenfinches, Chaffinches, Goldfinches, Robins, Great Tits, Yellow Hammers, or to be more precise, Yellow Buntings.

In the "Sandy Cuckoo."

Leaving the castle grounds, and regaining the canal bank, we reach a part called the Sandy Cuckoos. Here on several occasions, I have dug out the nest of a Kingfisher, each time with four or five eggs, of such clear transparent white that the yolk within tinted the eggs a delicate pink. Crossing one of the wooden swing bridges into the meadow at Mapledurwell, I can show you the bushes where I have found the nests of the Redbacked Shrike, also that of the Hawfinch, with every probability of finding them on this expedition.

You can easily tell if a Shrike or Butcherbird is about, by the cockchafers and caterpillars you will find impaled on the thorns near its nest. It builds a large nest for its size, and the eggs vary considerably. Sometimes the spots of the eggs are strongly pronounced, and on other occasions quite pale, blue and red, on a cream ground, the spots forming a circle round the larger end.

I have felt in writing this paper the subject is well-night inexhaustible. I have consequently dilated on one nest only of each variety. If I had gone into the different positions and places it is possible to meet the nest of the same bird. I should not have finished to-night. Whilst our jaunts this evening have been wholly imaginary, I want you to clearly understand they exist in reality, and although I have admitted taking the eggs on a great many occasions, of recent years I have studiously avoided doing so. I consider nothing more wanton than the destruction of the beautiful homes of our British birds as practised by the average boy—the nest thrown into a ditch, and the eggs threaded and hung in an outhouse—or, worse still, to take part in the brutal and degrading game of "hop egg."

I have a bone to pick with the gamekeeper. Owls and Hawks he shoots at sight, if within range; their nests, and that of the Jay, he puts a charge of shot through, perchance killing the hen on the nest, or scattering at least the eggs and nestlings. Then there is the idiot, with a gun, who shoots our rare specimens. What is wanted in our country schools is to follow the example of our London council schools, and make the birds a study, and so inculcate a love for them, that would prevent a deal of the destruction that goes on every year. Evil is wrought from want of thought quite as much as from want of heart.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

The Novices Notebook.

This page will consist of topical hints, addressed chiefly to beginners, concerning every branch of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the notes will be contributed from time to time by various leading experts.

Plantain Seed.

This is the ripe seed procured from the so-called rats' tails or plantain stalks which are given to the birds in the half-ripe stage. It is a small, dark-brown seed, not more than half the size of maw seed. It is exceptionally easy to gather a supply of it first hand, and, doubtless, many British birds, and birds flying loose in large aviaries, would relish it as a change. Many fanciers, however, have not found caged birds very partial to the ripe seed either on the stalk or free.

Dock Seed.

There are several varieties of Docks which are known to every one in the rank, leafing stage of its growth. It is a very common weed on any waste space. Towards autumn it will be found bearing tall, bushy heads of seed, which is one of the especial dainties of the Bullfinch. A small spray of it placed in a trap cage makes a most irresistible bait for him, and no seed will tempt him to commence feeding quicker when caught than this.

It is not so attractive to all birds, but many of the British seed-eaters are very fond of it, and as the trusses can be very easily gathered when ripe and carefully stored away to be given as required in small sprays, during the winter and spring months, it forms a very useful addition to the larder of the keeper of British birds.

Sorrels.

As with the docks, there are several species of sorrels which are equally common and well-known as weeds growing on waste places, and also in hay meadows, or rather, in meadows where the grass is allowed to mature and be mown for hay.

The common sorrel is the weed in question. In the Midlands, the younger generation know the plant well enough and call it by such names as "green sauce" or "green sorrel," and search out the plants in spring and pluck and eat the tender young leaves, which have a refreshing and not unpleasant flavour, being both sweet and slightly acid. Towards autumn the flower spikes are thrown up about two feet high and develop into large trusses of seed in deep-red sheaths.

When freed from the sheath, the seed is of a shiny-black colour, about as large as white-millet, but in shape like a grain of buckwheat, or, to use what may be a better-known example, triangular shaped, like a beech-nut.

This is another especial favourite of the Bullfinch, and as it is also extremely easy to gather, the keeper of these birds would do well to get in a good stock of dock and sorrel seeds for winter and spring use. Most of the thick-billed Finches will also doubtless relish a supply, as may also the Goldfinch, Siskin, and Linnet, but as I have not tried it much with these birds, this may be regarded as a mere suggestion.

But one may spare himself the trouble of offering it to Canaries, as the experience of most has invariably been the same, viz., that they utterly reject and ignore it, either when given in the spray, or when freed from the husk and given as loose seed. The writer has never yet known a Canary to touch it.

Lettuce.

The seed of this easily grown salading is not of much account to the bird-keeper. An old French writer on birds and their food described its virtues as cooling, and says it was used in his days for Canaries to cleanse and purge them. According to this authority, the freshest seed only should be used. Considering the virtue here claimed for it, it might be reasonably expected to be serviceable for occasional use during the summer months, to cool the blood and keep the birds from getting fagged out. It would suffice to give a pinch to each bird—such as Canaries and similar seed-eaters—now and again. My experience, however, is that few, if any birds are in any way partial to it, and the kernel of the seed seems rather too filmy and trifling to possess any great virtue.

As a green food, the virtue of lettuce must be infinitely greater than in the seed. The young, crisp, tender and succulent leaves of the plant are enjoyed by nearly all birds, both hard and soft billed, and are very cooling and refreshing in hot weather. Canaries are particularly fond of them and a bad or lazy feeder will often be converted and made a very tolerable parent by a small crisp lettuce leaf given her daily.

Oats.

Although this grain can scarcely be called a bird seed, as we generally understand the term, it is certainly a most useful item in the bird-keeper's larder. It is useful both as an extra item for occasional use in a small way for seed-eating birds generally, and as a regular portion of the diet of small Parrots and Parrakeets, whilst they are breeding and feeding young.

The grain is too well-known to need even the briefest description, but as there exists a very material difference in the size and substance of the grain it will be advisable to say that whenever oats are advised as a food for small birds, only the short plump-grained variety should be used. These are more economical and better in every way. They have a finer husk, and a much larger amount of edible kernel in proportion to their size, than the other kind, which has a grain at least twice the size, but of which the husk forms the greatest bulk. The birds also prefer the small stout grain, and can mill them much more easily than the larger kind.

Colour is immaterial, so far as nutritive value is concerned. As to whether the birds have any choice in the matter, is an open question, for although one can get the black oats just as easily as the white ones, many fanciers always use the latter—probably it may be admitted because of a mere whimsical fancy.

The uses are of a varied character and in a few cases must be handled with care. To give Canaries first place they are most valuable for building up the framework of bone and muscle of the larger breeds; but they require some care in their use, or the effect upon the alimentary tract will be rather harmful.

One of the very first concomitants of the use with any freedom whatever should be a large space in which the birds can get plenty of vigorous wing exercise—either a good sized aviary, outdoors for choice, or a very large flight cage. In addition to this a few grains of linseed should be given with them, and an increased supply of succulent green stuff, such as watercress or lettuce.

All these remarks will apply equally as well to oats in other forms, whether given as oatmeal in the soft food or as kibbled, chopped or rolled oats, or as coarsely ground oatmeal. Given the necessary conditions just named, a few oats thrown into the flights of any of the larger breeds, either young or old, once or twice a week, will be a valuable change.

Among British birds the Buntings are especially fond of them, and in many cases will almost entirely subsist upon them, and they are often the only grain these birds will eat for some time after being captured. The larger British Finches from the Greenfinch upwards are also partial to them, but these should have them only on special occasions as already pointed out. And even then, many prefer giving them the whole grains as obtained instead of any broken or crushed substitute. The smaller Finches eat them only when other seeds, which they like better, run short.

For foreign birds they are most useful to add to the diet of the small Parrakeets, such as Budgerigars, when they are taxed with the care of feeding large and hungry broods. Foreign Buntings are also fond of them in the regular diet. The larger Finches or Grosbeaks, amongst which may be included the Cardinals, and the Nonpareils, are all benefited by a supply, whilst they may always form a larger or smaller proportion in the staple mixture for foreign Pigeons and Doves.

The small foreign birds are so far similar to our own in their dislikes that they rarely, if ever, in the experience of most, touch oats so long as millet and Canary are available.

Any Other Variety.

As far as the great majority of bird-keepers are concerned other varieties of what may be termed agricultural, cereal grains are of little interest. Their chief use lies in forming a portion of the mixtures generally used as staple diet for Doves, Pigeons, and Parrots.

Where big stocks of birds of various sizes and kinds are kept together in large aviaries a handful of wheat, barley, buckwheat, or dari, may be scattered about occasionally as a variety and to keep the birds occupied in hunting after it. If they do not trouble to look for it, it will almost always sprout and begin to grow in a few days, and is then a great delicacy and treat for almost all kinds of birds. The most useful of all this class for caged birds are the sprouts of barley, which may be obtained in quantity and free from the the grain from maltsters, who dispose of it as "malt dust," or "malt culms." In the Midlands it is known by the former term, but the latter is a general term for it in some counties. A little of this thrown into the flights during the moulting season is a most useful and nourishing food and stimulant.

Grass Seeds.

The seeds of grasses are undoubtedly the most popular dainties with foreign seed-eaters. These extremely frugal creatures are by no means easy to cater for, if one wants to be always varying the diet and giving titbits. The fact that such continual variants are not really of any moment, or even necessary, weighs nothing with some kindly-disposed bird-keepers, and they are never so happy themselves as when they can give their pets some little variety every day.

With most of the foreign seed-eaters their only chance lies in giving the seeds of grasses, which in many cases are the birds' natural food. These seeds may be obtained at almost any gardeners' or farmers' seedsman, but probably few bird-seed dealers stock it. It should be bought in mixture—a mixture of any or every sort.

The aviarist who lives near to a farm, or has access to a friendly farmer, should never fail to procure the sweepings from the lofts and granary after the hay has been used up and the grain threshed. This will form an excellent item to throw into the aviaries or flights by handfuls now and again, and will keep the birds busily occupied picking it over for hours at a time.

Wild Seed Mixture.

Of late years this has been offered quite freely for sale, but the market must be rather limited. It appears to consist of the seeds of the weeds and flowers generally found growing wild anywhere in the country.

The seeds of a very large proportion of the mixture are of a very minute size, somewhat similar to the seeds of the plantains and shepherd's purse, and an expert botanist would think, not twice, but many times before attempting to name it. Because of the smallness of its size, many fanciers do not consider it of much, if of any, importance, and would certainly not run the risk of using it if they possessed well-kept gardens to which the waste from cages or aviaries was likely to find its way.

The risk of importing into the garden a bewildering variety of weeds which are difficult to eradicate once they get a footing, is too great for the lover of a well-kept garden to entertain.

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping. That volume is

and this year it has made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

Such Marvellous Value has never before been offered.

See what You Get for Your Money.

Coloured Plate.
An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramble-finch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

Calendar.
A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"Work of the Year."
A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"Washing and Preparing Birds for Exhibition."
Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries."
A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many excellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"Pairs Matched for Breeding."
A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"The Breeding of Hybrids."
An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"The Keeping of British Birds."
A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"Some Easily Obtainable Foreign Birds."
An account of some pretty and hardy species, with information on their caging and feeding.

"Review of the Exhibition Year."
Every breed of Canary, together with Hybrids, British and Foreign birds, has its progress on the show-bench during 1907 dealt with by leading judges, specialists, and experts, and the names of the principal winning exhibitors are given.

"The Diseases of Cage-Birds."
A feature in itself worth the whole cost of the volume. Diseases and accidents are described, and the best medicines and methods of treatment stated in simple language, and very fully and completely. It will save you many valuable birds.

"Glossary of Terms."
The curious terms used by fanciers are fully explained. Reference to the alphabetically-arranged columns will at once tell you the meaning of such expressions as jonque, leafy feather, mooning, rowing, and the like.

In addition to these features will be found a

Directory to Cage-Bird Clubs, Associations and Societies, with particulars of subscriptions, etc., list of Officials and Secretary's name and address.

Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

By THOMAS SMITH.

When the eggs are not removed, the first egg will hatch out two or three days before the last, giving the first hatched bird a start over the others, to its own advantage, and the disadvantage of the later hatched members of the nest. A day's difference in the hatching is bound to result in a strong young bird, and the remainder weaklings; the first hatched bird, of course, gets the best share of the food, and as a result, the younger ones are found dead for lack of food, or through being crushed by the older birds.

Broken Clutches of Eggs.

Some hens, particularly in cold weather, lay, say, a couple of eggs, and commence to hatch. In such a case I have given her the two eggs, marking them with strong ink, and have allowed her to sit. In the course of three or four days, she lays the remainder, thus putting the eggs on the footing of two different lots. The only way to ensure the full consignment of young in a case of this sort, is by splitting up the number of eggs, and giving a portion to another hen. This is advisable, when the hen moves about, till she has laid her full complement. The eggs will keep for 10 days or so if they are turned daily in the brand or sawdust, and are not exposed to the glare of the sun.

A most vexatious experience is that of having birds which eat eggs. It is not always easy to find out whether the cock or the hen is the culprit. If the former, he should be removed each evening, and put back each morning, after the hen has laid, taking him away altogether until the young are hatched. He can be placed beside another hen, and should he prove a good feeder, he can be run in beside his original mate. An excellent plan is to put him in a small cage, adjoining the nest, so that he can see every movement of the hen, and remain on good friendship with her. He can under these circumstances be run in beside the hen and the young.

If it is the hen that devours the eggs, she cannot be controlled so easily, being apt at any moment to turn round and make short work of the egg immediately it is laid. Even such a bad hen should not be discarded. Let her sit on china eggs; the efforts to break them may cure both the cock and the hen, when they discover that they cannot be destroyed. They may prove good feeders, and should be tested before being banished. I have known egg-eaters to be cured by giving them an egg filled with mustard.

Hen Forsaking Eggs.

Should a hen leave the nest, jump about and dress her feathers, and not look to the nest for some time, it is a sure sign that she has forsaken her eggs, and no time should be lost in transferring the eggs to another hen. They should be replaced by dummy eggs, as an inducement to return in case her services may be required for rearing.

Some hens return to eggs after a few hours' rest. In this connection it is advisable to get the hens to lay together, or as near as possible. That may be done where the eggs are clear, by setting off a day or two earlier, or the requisite number of days later, to bring the pairs alongside each other.

There are advantages with this in the rearing, it being possible to shift the young to have the strong in one nest and the weaker in another. The latter should be placed under the best feeders, as they are the most likely to help them to recover leeway. Another benefit is that it saves a solitary young one from being brought up by itself. A single-reared bird is never as strong as those brought up in a nest consisting of three or four, it not being so well fed. The single-reared bird, too, frequently leaves the nest deformed in some way; particularly is this the case with Scotch Fancy or Belgian Canaries. In rearing these graceful creatures there is safety in numbers.

The first nest may be taken as a testing process. If the pair are young birds the owner has to risk them in order to find out what kind of feeders they will be—"good" or "bad."

If two or three pairs are side by side in laying, and two pairs have been tested the previous year, give the high-class Canary's eggs to the tested pairs and give the pair that is in course of being tested common young to bring up. Or better still, if a nest of Goldfinch-Canary Mules are available, let the pair have them. I have known bad feeders to do well after rearing a strong lot of this kind. They are vigorous and give a lazy or indifferent breeder no peace until they are satisfied. That is what is wanted. Some feeders have to be trained, and young Goldfinch-Canary Mules are hard taskmasters.

Is it a Crime?

We hear a great deal about leaving the birds alone the first few days of their existence. With some, it is a crime to disturb the hen. But I say with all confidence, that the average hen is none the worse and the young do not suffer by raising her up to have a look at them. It is wise and desirable to see three times a day how they are progressing.

Do not be alarmed if food is not visible the first day; but afterwards, if all is going well, the right side of the neck will be puffed out with food.

If the body is healthy-looking, and the "down" standing up, there is no need for alarm. I had a large hen which would not feed a young bird when the cock was with her; so I put her aside, with the intention of trying her with a Goldfinch. In the interval she laid again, and being in a fix as regards a nest, I had to fall back upon her. When alone, she hatched and reared a nest of five young birds, and proved the best feeder I ever had. She reared more than any hen aided or unaided that I ever possessed.

If cock and hen are agreed, and both work in the rearing of young, it is preferable to have both. Some hens stop feeding when the young are eight or ten days old, and then it is an advantage, as he generally takes charge and keeps at the feeding, until the young are able to do for themselves.

Certainly hens will not feed with or without the assistance of their mate. If she is a well-bred Scotch Fancy or Belgian, do not discard her, but take what eggs can be got from her, placing them under another hen that can be relied upon. It is possible to raise prize winners from a bad-feeding hen.

This leads me to suggest that every fancier should provide foster parents. Border Fancy Canaries are very suitable, being lively and alert. They are capital sitters and when the young come they do not sit too close and are constant feeders.

For large Scotch Fancy or Belgian Canaries they may be rather light, and for them I recommend weightier foster-parents, such as crosses between Norwich and Scotch Fancy Canaries. Experience confirms my opinion that on this cross taking to the feeding of young, the pair cannot be surpassed.

All dead birds should be removed immediately. Here it is that the practice of occasionally looking in upon the young brood comes in beneficially. A young dead bird in the nest soon creates an offensive smell, affects the hen in cleaning the nest, and ultimately the survivors.

Sweating Hens.

As a rule sweating hens are troublesome. They are close sitters, and ought to be chased off the young at stated intervals, and kept off for a few minutes on each occasion.

This kind of hen should be allowed the use of the bath, and if she should not take to it she should be sprayed moderately, and allowed to bask in the sun, which will encourage her to prune her feathers. Sweating thus can easily be detected by the "down" on the young not standing up. Sweating may be due to derangement in the bird's system, and in such a case may only be temporary. Where sweating is permanent, it renders the hen almost useless as a mother or foster-mother.

All communications for this column should be written on one side of the paper only, duly authenticated with the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication, and sent to H. Norman, Editor, "Wild Bird Life," "The Eyrie," Salisbury-road, Carshalton, Surrey, by Monday in each week. Original observations and records invited.

The Wild Birds' Paradise.

Whenever wild birds are given the opportunity to live and nest quite undisturbed, then we see them in their most interesting form. It does not require a large tract of land for the purpose; any small plot suitably covered with trees, etc., and left wild, will soon be taken possession of by the Thrushes, Finches, and Warblers. Such sanctuaries are unfortunately few and far between. They do exist, but the difficulty to the genuine bird lover is to get the necessary permission to look round; too many intruders would soon take away the character of the place. Such a spot, near a village, is known to the writer. It is situated in the midst of cultivated fields. A few oaks, beeches, and firs grow here and there, with a fair quantity of underwood and furze in the more open parts, and the place is quite undisturbed. The wild birds have taken possession of it, as though it actually belonged to them. The wild character of the place with its low bushes and brambles is just suited to the requirements of the Finches; and Linnets were found in abundance. Some of the nests were beautiful constructions. One especially claimed notice; it was situated upon the spreading branch of a low evergreen, partly covered by the tiny leaves. The exterior was composed of rough, coarse roots and grass stems, with an inner lining of wool and hair, so closely matted together that it appeared almost like a felted nest, and bore a great resemblance to the interior of the home of the Goldfinch. The eggs were pale in colour, with the usual reddish spots. Their pale tint against the almost white interior gave the whole a most charming and delicate appearance. Another nest was equally beautiful, but not so chaste in colouring. The eggs were darker, and the nest was constructed upon coarser lines. The old bird was loth to leave her treasures, and wherever it was possible we kept well away from the sitting birds, disturbing them very little. The Linnets had not advanced further than the incubation of eggs. They are not particularly early breeders, but nests may be found as late as the end of August, when the fields are being cleared of the golden corn. Of our smaller birds, the Hedge-Sparrow commences in good time, and young ones in all stages of growth were plentiful. Following these broods will be others, and yet there are no signs of any increase in the numbers of these shrill songsters. They must either be naturally very short-lived or, in consequence of their so frequently feeding under the hedges and underwood, fall victims to predatory animals. Although we expected to find the Goldfinch nesting here, we were not so fortunate, but then, our ramble was only of a cursory nature. Our object was the locating of the Warblers and the Nightingale in particular. Many of these birds are shy and fond of keeping to the undergrowth; they can only, in many cases, be located by sound, and with us this was impossible, for the place simply swarmed with young Starlings just out of hand; they crowded the branches of the taller trees, jostling and quarrelling among themselves, or else they blundered clumsily about the taller bushes, meanwhile keeping up an incessant, irritating noise. It is quite evident that the Starling is becoming much too numerous. I sincerely hope this horde will not wander my way when the cherries are ripe, or I fear there will be little fruit left to pick.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

An Old Custom.

In days gone by it was the custom for parish vestries to set aside a sum of money for the catching and killing of Sparrows.

Range of the Turtle Dove.

The pretty Turtle Dove, a bird which visits us during the summer, departing again in September, is common throughout the Southern counties of England; but according to a Yorkshire naturalist it appears to be extending its range, and is now frequently seen in that county.

The Chaffinch's Nest.

All our Finches build pretty houses, but for beauty of structure, neatness, and finish, the Chaffinch must be given the premier position. The nest is beautifully felted together with wool, hair, moss, cobwebs, and various other things, and is always tightly woven into position, no matter where it is placed. When in the fork of a thorn bush, the branches are often built into the structure.

Burns and the Skylark.

In the South of England the Skylarks are almost as plentiful as the daisies and buttercups, but away north they are not quite so numerous. In Scotland the bird is often called the Laverock. It was a great favourite with Bobbie Burns, the national poet. He wrote:

"The Laverock shuns the palace gay,
And o'er the cottage sings;
For Nature smiles as sweet, I ween,
To shepherds as to kings."

The Production of Colour in Birds.

In an interesting article by Sir Ray Lancaster, in which he illustrates how colour is produced in reptiles and birds, he says:—The red, orange, and yellow colours of birds' feathers are produced by pigments which are either insoluble or only soluble with great difficulty in fluids of the nature of ether. There is, however, an exception in the case of the African birds called Turacous, or Plantain-eaters. These birds have some large quill-feathers in the wing of a rich crimson colour. This splendid red pigment can be washed out of the feathers by water which is slightly alkaline, and a fine blood-red solution is obtained. Why this curious exception exists we do not know. The extracted colour is found to contain the element copper as one of its chemical components. Plantain-eaters kept in cages have sometimes washed all the colour out of their feathers owing to the water supplied to them for bathing and drinking having become foul and ammoniacal, and thus capable of dissolving the red pigment.

The Trustful Chiff Chaff.

Of all the spring migrants the Chiff Chaff is possibly the least shy, upon first arrival, but as the season advances it becomes much more difficult to get an uninterrupted view of this dainty little warbler.

The House-Sparrow's House.

Some of us are inclined to overlook the ability of the common House Sparrow, considered as an architect and builder. It is quite true the nest is somewhat untidy, but for warmth and comfort few can surpass it. The assorted materials of which the exterior is composed speaks well for the bird's adaptability. Any odd trifle, such as string, rag, ends of hempen rope, etc., are included. Anything, in fact, which comes to hand appears good enough for the outside, but the cup is always warmly and thickly lined with hair, wool, and feathers. The bird builds two distinct types of nests—an open one, tucked away under the eaves, or in any odd corner round a building, and a domed affair placed among the branches of trees; this latter is really a work of art, and if built by a less common bird would be thought highly of. Although such a hardy species, the Sparrow shows how careful he is by building a roof to his house for protection during inclement weather. The structure is bulky and tightly woven together, and lined as snugly and warmly as possible. When examining these nests one has always a difficulty in finding the true opening.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

WILLIAMSON, GEMMELL & CO.,
Clifton House, 146, Lovely-lane, Warrington, Lancs., May 30, 1908. Messrs. Williamson, Gemmell and Co., seed merchants, 263, Argyle Street, Glasgow.—Gentlemen, — I am in receipt of the supply of cage bird seeds which I ordered on the 26th inst. I am pleased with the quality. Allow me, gentlemen, to say that I have bought this kind of seeds for my birds now for over four years from most seed merchants, but never before have I been able to get the quality of seed you consigned to me; in fact, the quality exceeded my expectations by at least 25 per cent. In conclusion, you may account me as another customer enrolled on your books for my future seeds, whilst you continue to favour me with such quality of seeds.—I am, gentlemen, yours faithfully, A. BOULTON BISHOP.

SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED COLOUR FEEDS.

Norwich Exhibitors. Read these.

At Crystal Palace Show, 1908. Every 1st prize winner, including championship diploma in open Norwich classes, were moulted on Royal Red. These are the classes where you can't win without colour. Mr. J. F. Bishop, Nottingham, writes, May 6th, 1908: "I have much pleasure in stating all my birds have been moulted on your Royal Red feed at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908. I won three champion classes in Norwich, including five specials for the best Norwich in the show, also many other prizes at Nottingham, Derby, Ilkeston, Wellingboro, etc." Mr. E. Baker, Cowes, May, 1908, writes: "Your Royal Red feed worked wonders again last season, as all will know with my winnings, which included three firsts at last Palace Show." Also have testimonials and orders this year from Messrs. Collings, Spilman, Cook, Tweedle, Barnes, Vardy, Lowe, Eckersley, Howe, Booth, Hope, Harland, Howard, Shaw, Bowyer, Morris, Hodder, Clemmson, Sherrington, Hill, and Stewart, etc., etc.,

Yorkshire Exhibitors. Read these.

Mr. J. Wilcock, Eccleshill, writes: "May 7th, 1908.—Sir,—Just a few lines to let you know all my birds have done extra well on your Royal Red feed. I was third for the great Yorkshire challenge cup, second for the Cinnamon-marked trophy, and third Shackleton trophy, and winner of L. and P.O.S. Cup, London; also won 50 specials, 63 firsts, 59 seconds, 51 thirds, 35 fourths, beside 100 other prizes, and second for Yorkshire Club specials. I think this speaks extra well for the grand bright rich colour I got, which pleases our judges so well. Send me half-cwt. at once." Mr. J. C. Barnes, Sheffield, writes: "February, 1908.—Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy I have great pleasure in informing you of the wonderful depth of colour I got in my birds last season by using your Royal Red. They came out exceedingly hot and beautifully bright, and not in the least bricky. At Sheffield Show, Nov. 8th-9th, I won silver challenge cup (making three years in succession), silver medal for hottest bird, special for best Buff cock, special for best hen, eight firsts, nine seconds, five thirds, and other honours. For last 10 years I have used no other feed, and I have great pleasure in recommending its use to all who are ambitious of procuring the highest colour at lowest cost." Also used last year by Messrs. Halliday, Cuthbertson, A. Hirst, Judge Battye, Greaves, Hartley, Parnell and Sons, Crisp, Nelson, Cowgill, Mallinson and Son, etc., etc.

Cinnamon Exhibitors.

READ THIS. Mr. E. Godley, Rishton, May 13th, 1908.—I may say your colour feed was extra last season, and I won more prizes than ever before which was
My colour was marvellous. Send me ½ cwt. Royal Red at once.

Also Messrs. Dormer's, Bentley's, Silk's, Howe's, Riding's, were moulted on Royal Red. Every 1st, 2nd, 3rd prize winner in Cinnamon section at last Crystal Palace Show were moulted solely on Royal Red.

Scotch Exhibitors. Read these.

At Glasgow and West of Scotland Norwich Plainhead Club Show in November, 1907, out of 16 colour-fed Norwich classes, 14 firsts were won with birds moulted on Royal Red. At Edinburgh Scottish National 8 firsts, 8 seconds, 9 thirds, 10 fourths in open Norwich. Every winner in Cinnamon section all moulted solely on Royal Red feed. Have scores more, but above should prove enough to satisfy you or anyone that there is only one colour feed on this earth—that's Sandiford's Royal Red. Prices Royal Red, 1 lb. 2/-, 2 lb. 3/5, 5 lb. 7/6; 14 lb. 17/-. Hot Natal, 2/- lb., 2 lb. 3/8. All carriage paid. Wholesalers and agents write for terms.

"EGGERTINE"

Is the best, purest and greatest bone and muscle forming food ever known, as the analytical reports of most eminent authorities prove. It is a genuine egg food made with fresh laid English eggs, with white, of course, included (and NOT foreign preserved yolk of egg), with other valuable properties combined. Tins, post free 1s. 3d.; large size 2s. 6d. There is a saving in the larger size.

It is the best proved food to bring hens into laying condition, and give strength and nourishment.

Remember, you know at least who you are dealing with, as I do not advertise myself as a female, I cannot stoop to that for the purpose of catching the "Innocents." To be "mere man" and act as such has always been good enough for me.

W. RUDD, THE Bird Specialist, NORWICH.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

PARROT PROBLEM

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle," now containing 168 pages. This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four week's trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

CLUB REPORTS.

QUEENSBURY C.B.S.

At the monthly meeting held on June 3rd we had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Walsh, of Halifax, tell of his experience of colour-feeding and moulting. His advice was to commence colour-feeding when the birds were about nine weeks old, using a flight of good size, the advantage of this being less work. The young birds, too, ate the food better than when in ordinary cages. The best colour-food possible, he said, must be obtained. Mr. Walsh makes his colour-food in the following manner: He bakes his egg-food into cakes in an ordinary oven, the egg-food consisting of six eggs, one piece of butter or lard about the size of an egg, two spoonfuls of baking powder, a cupful of sugar, and one pound of flour, mixed well together, like ordinary dough, and baked in a slow oven. To mix his colour-food he puts a cupful of egg-food through the egg-mill, slightly damps it, adds a spoonful of maw seed, and finally a quantity of colour-food to suit his own ideas. The most convenient time to draw a young bird's tail (according to Mr. Walsh) is the time when the bird's head and neck become a little patchy. Then put them back into the flight until the tail feathers begin to grow again, afterwards transfering them to the ordinary cages and training them to run into show cages. "The birds thus treated," said Mr. Walsh, "will equal my own birds." With these useful remarks the lecturer concluded his interesting and instructive address. A fairly good muster of members were present, and they expressed their satisfaction by their applause. If our members only adhere to what he said, they will be well rewarded.—SMITH JAGGER, Secretary.

SCOTTISH NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY CLUB.

The voting on the venue of the International Contest has resulted in the Glasgow and West of Scotland's Show, on November 13th and 14th, being selected. Arrangements for the contest will now be gone on with, and as members are already looking forward to the event, a great display of Plainheads, and a keen struggle between the clubs for the honours, are anticipated. I take this opportunity of reminding members that subscriptions are now due, and shall be pleased to hear from all. Breeders of the Norwich Plainhead in Scotland should see that their names are included on the club's membership roll without delay. Particulars may be had from myself.—J. BROWN, Secretary, 97, Petershill-road, Glasgow.

GATESHEAD AND DIST. C.B.S.

A meeting was held on June 10th, Mr. T. Almond in the chair. Arrangements for F.F. Show were proceeded with, and it was arranged to give attendance on June 18th up to 11 p.m., and June 20th, to 6, and to close of show at 7 p.m. Members from a distance to arrange with secretary. The question of food was discussed, and it was considered most advisable for exhibitors to send or bring their own; then such to be left with written instructions. A letter was read from Mr. Maddison, offering to guarantee a field-moulted Linnet class at open show, and offering a gold-centre medal for most points in the three Linnet classes, namely, Linnet house-moulted, Linnet novice, Linnet field-moulted. These were accepted, and the addition to open show schedule made. After some discussion it was agreed to hold next meeting on August 12th.—THOS. TAYLOR, Hon. Sec.

WEST OF SCOTLAND.

Usual monthly meeting held in Templar's Hall, Ingram-street, Glasgow, on June 6th, the President, Mr. T. A. Boyd, in the chair. Messrs. Thomas and Young are to have the final arrangements for the bowling match. The Border Fancy Members are requested to note that the classes at the annual show will be same as Border Fancy Club. But the cup and medals will be given for young birds as in the past. The First Feather Show will be held on July 4th at 4 p.m., in Mr. A. Muir's show-room, 176, Saltmarket, Glasgow. There will be medals for most points and best birds in hall, also specials for best third, fourth, and fifth birds, and for most entries. There will be classes for Crests, Plainheads, Borders, and Yorkshires, and a prominent judge has been secured. All intending members should enrol now, to enable them to compete in these classes. All information from GEO. SMART, Sec., Carmyle, Glasgow.

STONEHOUSE C.B.S.

A meeting was held in the Public Hall on June 13th, Mr. John Whitelaw presiding over a large attendance. It was reported that we could not get the hall for December 19th for our show, so we had to fix our date for December 12th.—J. GOVAN.

SCOTTISH METROPOLITAN (Open Derby) O.A.

A meeting was held in Buchanan's Hotel, Edinburgh, on May 30th. There was a large gathering of well-known Fanciers, a fine feeling of friendship prevailing throughout the evening. Mr C. R. Drysdale, hon. president, occupied the chair. Members not present will be pleased to hear that it was decided to extend the prize-cards from five to eight, the additions being vhc, hc, and c. The following gentlemen chosen to judge at annual exhibition to be held on September 26th have since very kindly consented to give their services, viz., Messrs. D. Low (Dundee), D. Black (Govan), A. Nisbet (Galston), and T. Braid (Kirkcaldy). We hope entries will be large, thereby giving them some hard work to overtake. The Artillery Hall, Grindley-street, has been secured for show. It is one of the best in the town for such a purpose, being central and near to stations. It will be very convenient for country members who intend being present. The following names are of those who have joined since the publication of our first list:—Messrs. McDougall (Edinburgh), Baird, Hart (Paisley), McLaren (Pollokshields), Duncan (Winchburgh), Miller (Falkirk), Pennycuick, Baxter (Leith), Cowan, Inglis (Kelty), Macdonald, O'Donnell (Paisley), McGregor (Kinross), Morrison (Glasgow), McClure (Mount Florida), Newbigging (Duns), Forrest, Aitchison, Whitelaw (Edinburgh), McEachern (Leith), Cobb (Leeds), Nivan (Falkirk), Menzies (Johnstone), Kennedy, Clark (Cowie), Winters (Edinburgh), Craig (Motherwell), Allan (Leslie), Mathieson, Laird (Edinburgh), Keddie, Brown and Whittett, Ness, Auchterlonie (St. Andrews), Kennedy (Paisley), Bell (Glasgow), Carson (Leith), Capt. A. J. Phillips (Edinburgh), J. Gordon (Macmerry), and Miss Brown (Duns). This makes a grand total of one hundred and seventy-seven members for our first year as an "Open Derby." At the close of the meeting, Mr. E. G. Wright, in a few words, proposed a vote of thanks to the executive for the work they have done on behalf of the Society, which had met with such gratifying success.—J. R. MEIKLE, Hon. Sec. and Treas.

HALSTEAD F.S.

A members' show was held in the Assembly Room, Halstead, on June 8th. Considering the fact that the society was only formed in November last year, it was a very creditable exhibition. The arrangements for the show were made by the committee, Messrs. Taylor, Stammers, Deeks, H. Sayward, W. Sayward, Meadows, Bartholomew, Laurence, and Wicker, with Mr. W. Monk as hon. secretary, and Mr. W. A. Smith, hon. treasurer. The cage bird judge was Mr. S. Coles (Halstead).

SOUTH LONDON COL. AND F.A.

A First Feather show (British and Foreign birds included) was held at headquarters on June 11. Mr. J. Dobson judged, and his awards were well received, the show being well attended by Fanciers through Press notice. Mr. F. Bizley (novice) won silver medal for best bird in show, and special for best Crest or crest-bred, with a good variegated Crest, well staged. Messrs. Lee and Kearney won special for best Norwich, with a clear Buff of good type, body and head, well shown. Mr. A. Biss won special for best Yorkshire, with a Yellow Variegated bird of good type. Mr. F. Bizley also won special for best British bird with a well-marked, steady Linnet.

LOWESTOFT AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The second annual show of young Canaries took place at the Fox and Hounds, London-road, on June 13th. There was a good number of exhibits, but the total did not quite reach that of last year. Mr. W. E. Greeves (Wrentham) was the judge; he expressed a good opinion of the exhibits, and added that the cinnamons were the best in the show, and were as good a lot as one would find in any big club for first feather birds. There were also a good lot of specials, including a pound of colour feed for the best 2nd Norwich Plainhead Yellow and ditto Buff, given by Mr. Hart, which were won by Messrs. R. Hatch and R. J. Wigg. Mr. Hatch is only a novice, but gave the champions a warm time, and with a bit of luck in the moulting season he will be heard of again at our autumn show. The specials were won by the following gentlemen: 2s. 6d. for best Plainhead champion, R. J. Wigg; 2s. 6d. for best novice Painhead, R. Hatch; 2s. 6d. for best champion Crest, H. Hart; 2s. 6d. for best novice Crest or crest-bred, J. Lay; 2s. 6d. for best champion cinn., H. Hart; 2s. 6d. for best novice cinn., L. Howard, A. Rickards, W. Lang, jun.

CHOPPINGTON AND DIST. C.B.S.

We held our second annual First Feather Show on June 13th at Railway Hotel, Choppington, when there was only a moderate entry, as most of our members are having a bad breeding season, on the whole, and lots of them did not get a feather the first round; but we are looking forward to doing better now the weather is a good deal better. There were about 30 birds present, and some very nice ones being amongst them. Mr. Alf. Gray judged to the satisfaction of all present.

JARROW AND HEBBURN AND DISTRICT C.B.F.S.

First annual Young Bird Show was held on June 13, in the Alexandra Hotel, High Street, Jarrow, kindly lent by Mr. D. O'Brien, who also gave a cash special. There was a record entry of birds in 12 classes. A special of a meerschaum and silver cigar-holder and case, given by Mr. R. Hutler, for best Yorkshire in show, was won by Mr. J. T. Carrick, the sec. One stone of best canary seed, given by Mr. Fred Athey, for best Norwich in Show, was won by Mr. Fred Furlong. A silver-mounted briar pipe, given by Mr. J. Richardson (Simonside), for most entries in classes, was won by Mr. J. T. Carrick, with 9 entries. This was a record for a young bird show, 60 birds being staged in a splendid room. Mr. J. Maddison judged. He commented well on the young birds, which reflected credit on a new society like Jarrow. The attendance of visitors was good, and the show on the whole was considered a success by all.

A grand members' show of Canaries in first feather was held at Park Chapel Schools on June 13th, when 83 birds were staged in 10 classes. Mr. R. Halliday, of Shipley, officiated as judge, and his awards gave every satisfaction. Competition was very keen in several of the classes, many of the winners being pressed very close for premier position. All points won at this show count towards valuable specials put up for competition by the society this year. The winners of most points at this show with four highest birds were Messrs. Stables, White, Cruise, Northrop, Hill, and Blezard.

EXETER AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A splendid exhibition of young birds was held at the Market Hall on June 13. The entry was very gratifying, and the quality good. Mr. D. Browning, the judge, spoke in glowing terms of the quality of the exhibits. Just on 70 young birds were staged, and considering the ill-luck which has attended some of the members, the executive can congratulate themselves on their first feather show for 1908. The chairman, Mr. W. Down, was backed up by an able committee. The hon. secretary, Mr. H. Folley, makes a very capable official, the arrangements being most complete.

NOR. YELL.: 1, Hutchings, good in colour; 2, Parker, more substance, stained beak telling against. HELSTON.

The Cage Bird Show held in connection with the Royal Cornwall O.S. was held at Helston on June 10 and 11. It provided a great attraction to the many visitors. The exhibits were nicely staged, and were thoroughly well cared for by the fanciers forming the Cage Bird Committee. The quality on the whole, considering the time of year, was first-class, several well-known winners being staged, and again secured winning brackets. Special for best in show went to Mr. Collins for his well-known six-pointed Buff Goldfinch-Canary Mule, shown in the best of form, and much admired. The Yorkshires made two good classes, the winners being typical specimens, and shown in good fettle. The class for seed-eating Britishers was headed by a grand Hawfinch of Messrs. Rowe and Hancock's—a bird possessing plenty of size, good in shape and feather, and well-marked. With a good moult this bird should have a successful career. Mr. W. J. Winn makes a most admirable secretary, being well on top of his work, his thoroughness being only equalled by his affability, tact, and courtesy. The awards were made by Mr. J. H. Payne.

WANDSWORTH AND DIST. F.S.

The Society held a very successful Cage Bird Judging Competition on June 11, at the Red Lion Rooms, Wandsworth. Three classes were provided, viz., one each for Yorkshires, Norwich and British Birds. Mr Easterling kindly undertook the task of judging, and gave every satisfaction. The first and second prizes consisted of silver spoons, and in the judging competition the first prize (a silver spoon), was presented by Mr. G. A. Badcuock; and second prize (3 neck-ties), by Mr. Roney. The winners in the three classes were: YORKS.: 1, 2, 3, T. Roney. NOR.: 1, 2, 3, vhc, hc, Lupton and Jordan. BRIT.: 1, Earl (Goldfinch); 2, Hanan (ditto); 3, Lupton and Jordan.

The winners in the Judging Competition were: First, Mr. Jordan; second divided between Messrs. Pearl and Lupton. We are sadly in need of cage bird members. Fanciers residing in the district and interested in cage birds we shall be pleased to enrol as members.—W. SUMMERS, hon. sec.

LONG EATON F.S.

The specialist society held their annual show of cage birds, etc., on June 13th, at the Tiger Assembly Rooms, Sawley-road. This was the first time cage birds were included, and from all accounts it won't be the last. Cage birds did not come up quite as good as was expected, probably on account of its being Whitsuntide. However, it was a fine show, being very nicely arranged along the centre of a good and well-lighted room. The secretary, Mr. Oldham, and the committee did all in their power to make things comfortable for the exhibits, the exhibitors, and the visitors alike. Mr. J. Bertie (Nottingham) made the awards, which were well received.

HYSON GREEN (Nottingham) C.B.S

Annual First Feather Show held on June 13th. It was a great success in every way, the exhibits numbering 62, which made a very nice collection; several of the exhibits promise to make it hot for some in the near future. The secretary, Mr. M. Garton, and his hard-working committee, are an fanciers of the right type, so there is little wonder the show was a success. The show as usual was held at the Cricket Players' Inn, where many a good show has been held. The room is a good one for size, light, and comfort, and everything went off all well. Some of the birds staged were not more than a month old. Birds which took back seats should, some thought, have won hands down. The judge was Mr. Tom Oliver.

Self, for most points in ticked or unevenly marked Yellow Yorks.; and Mr. A. Lister, for best ticked or unevenly marked Buff Yorks.—J. HOLROYD, Secretary.

CITY OF GLASGOW O.A.

The half-yearly general meeting was held in City Hall Saloon, Glasgow, on June 13th, Mr. A. Jardine (president) presiding. The attendance was not so good as might have been, but the interest and enthusiasm shown were most gratifying. The discussions and deliberations dealt with every point affecting the show and competition to be held in October next. The principal subjects were the classification and election of judges. There has been added to the classification two novice classes in the Scotch Fancy section, four Yorkshire classes, a class for any variety of Canary not already provided for in prize list, an extra selling class (crested cock or hen), and an additional class by splitting class 47. The judges nominated are: For Norwich Plainhead section, Messrs. J. Adams (Dundee), J. Ferguson (Glasgow), W. Muir (Kilmarnock), Booth (Runcorn), Cameron (Kelso), and C. Campbell (Glasgow); for Crest and crest-bred section, Messrs. A. Muir (Glasgow), Noble (Kilmarnock), J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh), and Adams (Kilmarnock); for Mules, British and Foreign birds, Messrs. M. Craig (Glasgow), P. Pettigrew (Glasgow), A. Muir (Glasgow), Bald (Bathgate), McQuiston (Ayr), and Livingstone (Bathgate); for Border Fancies, Messrs. Sommerville (Auchinheath), Arnot (Hawick), Bennett (Kelso), Turnbull (Hamilton), Ritchie (Lesmahagow), Hardie (Auchenheath), and McMillan (Dumfries); for Scotch Fancies (Glasgow), Messrs. Dr. Muslin and A. Clark (Rutherglen), J. Knox (Glasgow), J. Smith (Govan), A. M. Caig (Glasgow), J. Y. Millar (Govan), and J. Smith (Glasgow); (Country), Messrs. D. Low (Dundee), G. Hope (Edinburgh), D. Holden (Muirkirk), Hannay (Dumfries), Thornton (Edinburgh), Carlow (Falkirk), Arnott (Lauchie), and Paterson (Edinburgh); for Belgians, Messrs. G. Fulton (Partick), J. McLennan (Edinburgh), and P. McLellan (Glasgow). A motion was tabled for December meeting that voting by proxy be abolished. A vote of thanks to the president for his conduct in the chair closed the meeting.—A. MACDONALD, Sec.

A DAY IN EPPING FOREST.

By J. S. Clarke.

A Record of the Annual Outing of the Leyton and District C.B.A. and members and friends from the North London and Walthamstow Societies.

Possibly owing to the fact that this outing took place on the Saturday preceding Whit Monday, the attendance was not as large as was anticipated, the total muster being 22, including Messrs. B. F. Forse, A. Forse, Shepherd, C. H. Cooper, Dickenson, Williamson, H. J. Fulljames, the brothers Morris, Harper, Burbage, Bell, H. Clarke and others. I must apologise to the other gentlemen whose names for the moment, I cannot recollect.

The birds that may be met with in Epping Forest are as follows: Sparrow Hawk, Kestrel, Barn, Tawny, Long-eared, and Short-eared Owls (the last-mentioned being an autumn and winter visitor), Red-backed Shrike, Rook, (Rookeries at Leyton Flats, Woodford Green and Copped Hall), Jackdaw, Magpie, Jay, Starling, Song Thrush, Blackbird, Redwings, Fieldfare, Missel Thrush, Wryneck, Green, Greater-spotted and Lesser-spotted Woodpeckers, Nuthatch, Tree Creeper, Kingfisher, Cuckoo, Sparrows, Greenfinch, Hawfinch, Bull finch, Chaffinch, Yellow Bunting, Goldfinch, Linnet, Tree Pipit, Common Wren, Robin, Wagtail, Spotted Fly-catcher, Nightingale, Redstart, Hedge Sparrow, Garden Warbler, Sedge Warbler, Blackcap, Greater and Lesser Whitethroats, Chiff Chaff, Willow, Wood and Gold Crested Wrens, Wheatear, Whinchat, Stonechat, Great, Blue, Cole, Marsh, and Long-tailed Tits, Martins, Swallows, Swifts, Nightgar, Woodpigeon, Turtle Dove, Pheasant, Partridge, Lapwing, Landrail, Heron, Woodcock (a winter visitor), Snipe, Coot, Moorhen, Bahchick and Wild Duck.

As previously arranged, I was chosen as guide, and at the request of several present, consented to chronicle the events of the day for CAGE BIRDS. Joining the party at Woodford, we journeyed to Loughton, and on surveying the small dimension of the party, it was decided to wait another train's arrival for possible laggards. As the result, the burly form of a well-known fancier appeared on the scene (a welcome addition). I won't mention his name, he being so late. Following much the same route as we did last year, we passed Paul's nursery, beyond which stretches Strawberry Hill on the right. We at last arrived at the scene of operations, the party splitting up into 3 sections, with a keen pair of eyes at the head of each, and all keeping well within hail.

"Hullo! here she is. What is it?" (all in one breath). On hastening to the spot, the riddle was of easy solution. The nest was high up in a thorn bush, and was composed of sticks, lined roots, and contained 3 youngsters (possibly 48 hours old); flesh, terra-cotta colour, with a profusion of sooty down. It was agreed nem con that they were Bullfinches. Note: there were 2 eggs in the nest containing dead young ones. During the afternoon, many other Bullfinches were found, and enquiries could be heard as to how young Bullies fared with Canaries as foster mothers. Thrushes and Blackbirds (with eggs and young) were found on every side; in fact, I might say in every other bush, the hens sitting tight on their treasures. Half-a-dozen of the party inspected them at short range, and it was a feature of interest, notwithstanding their being so common. Owing to the torrential rains that have occurred at intervals of late, many birds had been compelled to forsake their eggs and young, and a nest with but a couple of youngsters and some spoilt eggs, was not an uncommon find. The first of its kind was that of a greater Whitethroat, containing 2 youngsters, fully fledged.

Wending our way in a zig-zag course towards Connaught Waters, and nearing the Epping New Road, for the first time in my experience of the Forest I heard the well-known call of the Yellow Bunting. It was like meeting with an old friend, and opening up the flood gates of memory, it took me out of the present expedition, back many years to similiar expeditions in my boyhood's days, when satiated with spoil and climbing we threw ourselves full length in the shade out of the glare of the noonday sun, and lazily called back to the bird our interpretation of his call—"A little bit of bread and no-o-o o-h-e-e-s-e." From past to present with a jump in order to reply to Mr. Morris who came running through the thorn bushes with the query: Did you not say there were no Yellow Buntings hereabout? I confessed my error, and told him that I had noted its presence for the first time in the locality. That did not finish the subject, for the shout of another member of the party proclaimed another find, and on locating the finder, not a too easy task, and examining his find, it was plainly evident the eggs (2) belonged to a pair of these birds. We found another nest later on containing 3 eggs. A Linnet's nest with damaged eggs, too, we found, and several more with eggs and young. I heard one fancier remark: "If any of you come across a nest of Thrushes just right for hand-rearing." That is all he said—everyone who heard seemed to understand.

Amusing incidents occurred at frequent intervals. One nest, situate right in the top of a thorn bush some 8 or 9 ft. up, brought up an incident that occurred last year on the day of the N.B.B. and M.C. outing. It may be recollected by many that were there, a gentleman was hoisted on the shoulders of two stalwarts in order to reach a nest in just such a position. I am loth to recall a painful incident, but he crashed lengthways through that bush with ruinous results to his epidermis. On the present occasion a wag in the party asked if the same gentleman would again make the attempt? And the hearty greet of laugbter that echoed through the woodland at the inquiry, renewed with even greater heartiness at the victim's emphatic refusal, testified that it was a scene "In strong remembrance set."

Leaving the Epping New Road directly behind us, and turning obliquely on reaching the wood leading to Tong Hills, we quickly reached the lake known as Connaught Water. Another amusing incident hereabout. A man and a maid indulging in love's young dream were desirous of getting to High Beech, and at the same time were walking vigorously towards London. Having nearly reached the Red Path, they had the good fortune to encounter the Leyton fanciers and friends. Upon their own solicitation, H.J.F. kindly but firmly turned them round and sent them with his benediction in the right direction, which, needless to say, at this point was just opposite to the way they were going. One more incident and then back to the birds. Another find—this time a half-grown rabbit. It was quite warm, evidently only just killed by some dog. Quoth the finder: "All right, throw it here; it will do for my ferrets." It was thrown, and caught, very much so. It was warm—hot in fact—it would no doubt have been better if kept in cold storage. No more on this subject.

Books Every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

Canary Breeding for Beginners — Post free, 7d.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual — post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our Invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") — post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

THE LANCASHIRE CANARY: SOME EXHIBITION POINTS & FAILINGS.

Notes on the Drawing on page 573.

By S. R. COMPSTON.

As with other breeds of Canaries, there are good, bad, and indifferent Lancashires, and CAGE BIRDS' able artist has here tried to picture the variations we meet with in the Lancashire Canary. Some of the defects he portrays are very common, others more rarely met with. A good Lancashire is a bird to be proud of, and it is surprising how soon the news travels all over the county that, "Mr. So-and-So, has bred a real good one"

A "gradely brid" is built after the manner of the bird depicted in the centre of the chart. Note the grand mould of this bird, both back and front. In front full, gradually tapering away to beyond the root of the tail. The back is rounded also, but not quite as full as the front; still, a fulness that gives to the bird a proper slight curve. The drawing is not a bit larger than many specimens that have been shown.

The bird's legs are long and strong, as they ought to be, and the artist has "caught on" very well to the position of an exhibition Lancashire when standing at "attention" on the perch. He has plenty of daylight under him, and the body well balanced, giving the bird a certain gracefulness, with a look of strength and confidence, and a "care for nothing" manner, without any suggestion of perkiness or "cheek."

There have been many discussions from time to time in the Press about the points of the Lancashire, but all agree that these birds should be as large as possible, long-sided, long in tail, with substance in keeping with the length, and possessing limbs capable of carrying their large bodies as gracefully and as freely as the most lightly-built variety of the Canary can move.

The head of the Coppy has been a bone of contention. This has come about by reason of otherwise good birds having a bad-shaped coppy. A novice in the art of Lancashire breeding gets confused between the shape of the head of a Crested Norwich and the head of a Lancashire Coppy. The top of the Norwich is dome-shaped, while that of the Lancashire is distinctly flat on top. The crest of the Norwich extends full all the way round the head, the coppy of the Lancashire is not full behind.

There are many good specimens, however, which have a coppy extending round to the back of the head, but the feathers lie close to the back of the skull, and consequently, no roughness is visible until the bird is closely examined. Birds of this description are generally well finished in front, and carry a good length of coppy on the sides, which balances the overdose of feather at the back, so that the bird still keeps (to the eye) to the well-known shape of the coppy. A reference to the picture will show you the coppy appearing to finish at the sides of the back skull.

A "split coppy" is not uncommon. This gives a bird a ragged and rather scraggy appearance. Sometimes it is caused by a scantiness of feather (not enough coppy to cover the wide front), but very often there is a damaged quill bending a few feathers over, and so causing the split, or divided front. If on examination a damaged feather is found, it should be pulled out, when possibly the defect in the appearance of the coppy may disappear. If the split is due to scantiness of feather, breeding with better-headed birds is the only remedy.

Some Lancashires show a roughness at the back of the coppy, a defect which makes the bird look very coarse. Too much feather is the cause. Now, Lancashire breeders do not always say what they think. The common saying is that this defect comes from breeding with two Coppies (mating Coppy cock and a Coppy hen). I suspect, however, a Crested Norwich has been used some time or other to get more feather on the head, and the breeder has not bred it out.

In the same circle as the coppy showing a roughness behind, is a head short of coppy feather in front. A very bad type for a show Coppy, this, but if one of this kind is good in other respects, it is likely to prove useful as a breeder, if used as a Plainhead, that is, pairing the bird to a Coppy.

In the top corner is a bird weak in beak; as a rule, no good except as a feeder, or to be kept by someone who wants a pet Canary. The neck is also too thin and long, and the eye looks in the wrong place, set too far forward.

In the left-hand corner, at the bottom of the plate, is shown a type of bird that has led to much wrangling. Note the position of the "good specimen" in the centre, and then the position of this bird. The picture reminds me of a curate that I know. He knocks at a door, or takes his hat off to some one, and then seems to hesitate and wonder if he has done the proper thing. Sometimes I am not quite sure that he is a curate, but rather a school girl in curate's garb! There is no hesitating and "begging your pardon" about the real Lancashire.

The two heads of the Plainheads shown in the bottom right-hand corner, are of a kind that have "taken down" many judges, so one can excuse a novice being mistaken in his opinion sometimes. The head of a Lancashire Plainhead should be long in appearance and flattish on the top, but not narrow, and not pointed in front. The upper picture shows this latter defect. The lower head is all right in front, but too round-looking on the top.

The Plainhead standing near the top of the plate, "too straight in back," lacks type. It is of a kind often shown, however, and many exhibitors have wondered why they have not got further up in the cards with a bird like the one depicted.

Perfect birds, of course, are not very often seen. I have never judged a class of Lancashires yet containing one bird possessing all the points perfect; some excel in one or two places, failing in others; some have just the points in abundance that these latter birds are lacking!

My advice to beginners is, study the chart, fasten the picture of the good bird on your minds, look at the defective specimens portrayed, and if you have some like them, write to the Editor of CAGE BIRDS, telling him how you have bred them, and asking him how to avoid breeding that kind, and how to set about breeding good ones. Remember the old saying: "There's nothing lost by asking," and "He that will not be counselled cannot be helped."

BURY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

General meeting was held at Textile Hall, Bury, on June 9th. There was a notable increase in the attendance, due, no doubt, to the fact that the late secretary was attending his last meeting in that capacity. The agenda included a review of the arrangements for the forthcoming young birds' show to be held on July 4th. The last day for entering is June 30th. Arrangements are to be made for a ramble to the "Chapel House," Ashworth, on Sunday, June 28th. It is proposed to meet at the Bury Parish Church at 2.30 and proceed to the "Chapel House" for tea. Afterwards the members will continue their outing to Rochdale, and a visit will be paid to the headquarters of the Rochdale Society. The resignation of the secretary, Mr. W. P. Turton, and the appointment of a successor was considered. The resignation was accepted, and Messrs. T. Clarke and F. E. Holden were elected as joint secretaries. The Chairman, Mr. J. R. Greenwood, expressed regret at Mr. Turton's decision. His resignation was the outcome of circumstances which necessitated his removal from the district, he having taken over a business at Bispham, near Blackpool. He was enrolled a member at the inauguration of the society. Since he became secretary, a few years ago, the society had prospered financially and numerically. Other members present spoke of the good work accomplished by the late secretary, and expressed their sincere regret at his departure. Mr. Fallowes, an old member, after giving testimony to Mr. Turton's efforts, said he thought that as a slight recognition of his services the society might make Mr. Turton a life member of the society. This suggestion was readily and unanimously adopted, after which the chairman, on behalf of the society and himself, wished Mr. Turton every success in his new undertaking. In reply, the late secretary expressed his regret at being obliged to put business before pleasure and resign an office which had given him such pleasure. He thanked them heartily for the kind testimonies, and for the honour conferred upon him. He hoped the society would continue to prosper, but, he said, it was necessary the same support be given to the new secretaries in the future as had been afforded him in the past.—F. E. HOLDEN, Joint Secretary.

Cage Birds Charts:

How to Judge Exhibition Birds.

NO. 9: THE LANCASHIRE CANARY.

[See Full-page Drawing and Explanatory Notes on pages 573 and 565 this week.]

In this issue No. 9 of the series of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS appears. It deals with the Lancashire Canary, and the lover of this bird, and especially the beginner, has only to keep the chart in his birdroom to have always before him the ideal to look for and breed to, while the faults to be avoided can never escape his eye.

In due course many other favourite exhibition birds will be made the subject of one of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

The same great pains will be taken to ensure the completeness of every chart, and its accompanying letterpress, and the deft fingers of our artist will portray the excellencies and deficiencies of the birds with the same precision and clearness. The value of CAGE BIRDS latest feature to the novices and amateurs in our hobby will be obvious to all, and we ask our many kind friends to bring CAGE BIRDS CHARTS to the notice of everyone interested in Bird-keeping and breeding.

Impress upon them that they must on no account miss any one of the series to be issued in the near future, or they will miss a TRULY HELPFUL AND EDUCATIONAL feature never previously put before bird-keepers.

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS may be had beautifully printed on stiff art card, with eyelet holes, for hanging in the bird-room, price 3d. each, or any three for 7d., or any six for 1s., post free. The explanatory notes and scales of exhibition points are printed round the margin. No. 1, the Goldfinch, No. 2, the Yorkshire Canary, No. 3, The Bullfinch, No. 4, The Border Fancy, No. 5, The Hawfinch, No. 6, The Lizard Canary, No. 7, The Norwich Plainhead, and No. 8, The Wheatear, Whinchat, and Stonechat, are now on sale, and No. 9 will be on sale early next week. BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1908 SEASON.

I am finding the breeding results this season quite up to the mark. I have 25 doing for themselves, and have about 40 in the nests, most of these will soon be knocking about.—P. HARRIS (Eckington).

The breeders about Manchester appear to be having very varied fortune, some doing badly with their first round, while some few are going well ahead. Mr. Coulson, of Ardwick, has about forty; Mr. Spence, of Openshaw, thirty-six; and several other fanciers I know have anywhere between twenty and thirty young birds. I have twenty-eight up to date, but no Mules. The weather has been so changeable that we have had nothing but clear eggs from our Muling pairs. Still we live in hopes of having a good nest.—W. DOWNING (Manchester).

Ormskirk and District C.B.S.

Up to date the majority of our members have had a sucessful season with their breeding stock, a good number of very promising youngsters being on the sticks. Reports from the Hybrid fanciers are also very favourable, one breeder of the latter variety having already serious thoughts of the Crystal Palace show. There is, too, every appearance of there being keen competition at the young bird show on July 11.—T. H. TIFFEN, hon. sec. of the Ormskirk and Dis. C.B.S.

Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S.

At our meeting held on June 11th, after the business we had a friendly discussion on the results of the breeding season to date. Some of us found the first round very promising, but failed on the second, and others were disappointed on the first and are now rejoicing over the progress made since. Taking the average, the members present had from 37 pairs 3 young per pair, which is not very high for the first and second rounds. Individual members have done very well, one having 35 young birds and 30 eggs incubating. Two or three other members have 5 and 7 young ones per pair.—F. W. HAMER, hon. sec of the Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S.

Bolness and District O.A.

Fanciers in this district are doing fairly well, although every one has had a lot of clear eggs. But they hope for better results from the next round. We ourselves have a few promising Plainheads on the sticks; also five eggs from the Redpoll-Bullfinch, and five from the Greenfinch-Bullfinch, from which we are hoping to get good results. Messrs. M. Geegor and Boyd have lost a lot of Mules, but have still a few on the sticks and some to hatch. Messrs. Grant and Sneddon have been lucky enough to hatch a Goldfinch-Bullfinch, which at the time of writing is four days old and doing well; it ought to be heard of yet, as its parents are both good specimens. They have also some Plainheads and Crests on the sticks. Mr. Alex. Laing has bred a few good Scotch Fancy, also Norwich Canaries. The rest of the fanciers in this district have all a lot to hatch yet.—FINDLAY MCGILLIVRAY, sec. of the Bolness and Dis. O.A.

Barnsley and District C.B.S.

Mr. W. H Lindley, our president, who is going in for both Norwich Plainheads and Crests, has about 70 young ones. Mr. W. Rapson has both Yorkshires and Norwich and twenty young ones. Mr. J. Taylor has 62 young ones, both Yorkshires and Norwich, and is talking about sending some to the next Palace show. Mr. T. Thorpe has had only moderate luck with but twelve up to the present. Mr. W. Smith lost all his first lot, but has 15 doing nicely now Mr. F. Race has 20 young, all doing well, and Mr. G. Morrison (Cudworth), has 5 from four hens; he is busy making some up-to-date cages so that he can start next year in tip-top form. Mr. J. Ainsworth (Gawber), started the season full of hope, but owing to a fire which occurred in the night, next to his house, the smoke came through into his birdroom and upset his little game; but he is not down-hearted. Messrs. Crossland Bros. (Barnsley), are doing very well; it is their first year at breeding Canaries, and from nine hens they had 36 young ones from the first round, and 16 from the first four nests in the 2nd round. They have not yet lost a single young one. I am myself doing fairly well, having 43 young Yorkshires, most of which are on hard seed. Other members I have not seen, but will let you know later how they are doing.—E. CARLISLE, sec.

Secretaries and Fanciers are invited to send their experiences.

OUTINGS.

HASTINGS UNITED C.B.S.

On June 10th about 20 of the members proceeded to the historic town of Battle, to hold a meeting at the George Hotel to induce a few more to become members. Mr. J. Stevens gave his lecture on British birds and seeds, which he illustrated with some very fine paintings of birds and seeds done by himself, he being an artist of no mean merit. Mr. T. G. Coombs presided over a good attendance. During the evening a vote of sympathy was unanimously accorded to the president, Mr. E. E. Clarke, on the loss of his son Hubert, who was lost overboard in the Bay of Biscay on June 3rd A vote of thanks to Mr. Foster for the accommodation afforded brought the meeting to a close, the members returning to Hastings by train.—A. E. GODDEN, Hon. Sec.

HARTLEPOOLS C.B.S.

On Whit Monday, through the kindness of D. W. Meiklejohn, Esq., the members, for the third time, visited Wynyard Park, where they were met by the keepers, and conducted in four groups through the extensive grounds. Many were the delightful objects of natural beauty brought to the notice of the party by the enthusiastic guides. To the students of ornithology especially was the ramble pleasant and profitable. Nests, eggs, and young of the following species were found: Yellow Bunting, Nettle-creeper, Chaffinch, Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Blackbird, Thrush, Whitethroat, Greenfinch, Hawk, etc. The party afterwards met at the Ship Inn, Wolviston, for tea. After the meeting the remainder of the evening was spent in harmony, to which most of the members contributed items of merit, but special mention should be made of the efforts of Mr. E. Pringle. Mr. A. Meynell occupied the chair, and kept the whole party in good humour. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the host (Mr. Hoy), and also to D. W. Meiklejohn, Esq., for his continued kindness and courtesy.—ERNEST WOODHEAD, late Hon. Sec.

BRADFORD (East) O.S.

A good number of members, with their wives and friends, turned up on Whit Tuesday for the ramble to Harden. Taking car to Allerton the party walked from Sandy Lane through the fields to Harden, where a fine cricket match was played between teams picked by Messrs. Peacock and White (vice-presidents. This proved quite an exciting affair, as the teams were pretty evenly balanced, and Mr. Peacock's side only ran out victorious after a hard struggle by about six runs. The party which numbered 66, afterwards adjourned to the Malt Shovel, where the host provided a most substantial tea, to which full justice was done. After tea we wended our way through Harden to Cottingley and Saltaire. The country round about here being at its best just now, this walk was a very pleasant one, and a section of the members went in for finding birds' nests, but there had evidently been someone round before, who had destroyed many of them, much to our disgust, as this is a district which is noted for being the home of many of the rarer species of British birds, the like of which we only occasionally see. Our hobby has one good principle for each of its members, and that is, it gives us far more interest in our walks in the country, and induces us to show a kindly feeling to our feathered friends, who help to make everything in Nature so enjoyable during this time of the year. From Saltaire the party took car to Bradford, and arrived home at about 10.15, the cricket match having made us later than usual.—H. HILL, Secretary.

Kindly state that I have been appointed sec. for the cage bird section of the Forfar Association, writes Mr. William Grewar, 5, Bell Place, Forfar.

The young bird show in connection with the Shields C.B.S. has been fixed, writes Mr. W. Duke, the hon. sec., for July 29th, at the Eureka Hotel.

I have removed from 23, Belgrave Road, Wilnecote, writes Mr. G. Spencer, hon. sec. of the Tamworth and Dis. C.B.S., to 4, Aldergate, Tamworth.

Members of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.A. are requested not to overlook the extraordinary special general meeting summoned for June 22nd, at headquarters.

We are having our Nest Feather show on July 25th, writes Mr. S. Hadwin, sec. of the Green Canary Association. The judge will be Mr. C. Houlton (St. Helens).

Worcester open show, fixed for November 19th, writes Mr. A. E. Bishop, hon. sec., will be held under C.B.U. rules. It promises to be one of the finest in the Midlands.

Our First Feather show for members is to be held on Saturday, July 18th, writes Mr. R. H. Turner, sec. of the Morley and Dis. C.B.S. Mr. A. Chew has been asked to judge.

Entries for the table show to be held on June 25th, writes Mr. W. Bird, hon. sec. of the Ealing, Hanwell, and Dis. F.S., must reach me not later than first post on June 25th.

Am delighted with the sale which has followed my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. G. B. Leclair (Leytonstone). I had orders from New Zealand, South Africa, Canada, and other places.

The London and Counties O.A. hold their young bird show on Saturday, June 27th, at "The Goat and Compass," 341, Euston Road, N.W., writes Mr. R. J. Pretty, when the admission will be free.

We are having two First Feather shows, writes Mr. W. Charlesworth, sec. of the Dewsbury and Dis. C.B.S. Mr. T. Bentley (Cleckheaton), will judge the one on July 4th, and Mr A. Bottomley (Laisterdyke), that on August 1st.

The Bristol Cage Bird Society, we note, hold their First Feather show at headquarters today, Saturday, June 20th. There are nine classes, with Mr. J. H. Payne, of Gloucester, as judge.

Mr. S. Hadwin (Liverpool) has been appointed to judge all sections of cage birds at our show, to be held on the 4th and 5th December, writes Mr. J. Simon, hon. sec. of the Cockermouth and Dis. F.S.

I have removed from Woodland, Butterknowle R.S.O., to Darlington, writes Mr. P. C. Forster, my present address being 52, Barningham street, Greenbank, Darlington. Will secretaries and brother fanciers please note?

Owing to my having had 63 replies, I find it impossible to reply to all personally who wrote in answer to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. P. Morris (Ryde). Will fanciers who wrote kindly note that the bird is sold?

The young bird show of the South West London C.B.S. will be held at the Plough Hotel, Clapham Junction, on Saturday, June 20th, writes Mr. Lilley, hon. sec. He adds that his new address is 5, Mysore Road, Lavender Hill, S.W.

The Battersea C.B.A. is this season again running an open young bird show at the "Duchess of Devonshire," Lavender Road, Clapham Junction. The date fixed upon is July 1st, and the schedule will be found reviewed in this issue.

That well-known fancier in the south-west district of London, Mr. J. Best, took unto himself a wife, we hear, on Sunday, June 14th. Metropolitan bird-lovers will join in extending every good wish for the happiness of himself and bride.

The Blackpool C.B.S. will have a rare "catch" if they "land" Mr. W. P. Turton (late sec. of the Bury society) in their "net," writes "Buryite." He is an ardent fancier, and will shortly be residing at Bespham. Bury's loss—Blackpool's gain.

At the last meeting of the Hastings United C.B.S., we hear from the sec., Mr. A. E. Godden, a vote of condolence to Mr. E. E. Clarke was accorded on the loss of his son, Hubert, who was lost overboard in the Bay of Biscay on June 3rd.

The Forfar and Dis. C.B.I.S., writes Mr. W. Grewar, the hon. sec., are holding a member's First Feather show, in the St. Andrew's Hall, on July 4th, when Mr. D. A. Craig will judge. We are giving 12 classes, and hope to have a good turn out.

Fanciers in the metropolis should not overlook the young bird show of the Metropolitan C.B.A. on Thursday, June 25th, in the 'Crown Hotel," Lavender Hill, S.W. There are thirteen classes, judge Mr. G. E. Weston. Members should note that entries close June 22nd.

The Littleborough C.B.S. have decided to hold their Back-End open show on November 28th, writes Mr. H. Smith, the sec. Mr,. R. Barrass (Rochdale), will judge Lancashire and Lizards, and Mr. Mundell the Yorkshires and Norwich. Mr Harrison (Hebden Bridge), will judge our First Feather show on June 27th. Both shows will be held at the Conservative Club, Peel Street.

We have arranged to hold our First Feather show on July 1st, at "The Boot Inn," Eastgate Row, N., writes Mr. A. J. Red, hon. sec. of the Chester and Dis. C.B.S. Mr. A. Wellings (Prescot), will officiate as judge. He will also judge at our old show to be held on December 9th

The Coventry Godiva C.B.S. are holding th ir young stock show on July 11th, writes Mr. W. H. Bray, the hon. sec. We have also secured the services of Mr W. G. Poole (Stratford-on-Avon), as judge. This being our first show of young stock, we hope it will turn out a successful one.

Fanciers should bear in mind the show to be held in the People's Park, Grimsby, on July 9th (under C.B.U. rules). The profits of this fixture all go to deserving charities. Mr. T. J. Ambrose judges the cage birds, and a review of the schedule will be found on another page. The occasion is the Amalgamated Friendly and Trades Societies Charity Gala.

The handbook for 1908 of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.A., a most artistic production, and containing a fine programme of events for the present season, reaches us from the hon. sec., Mr. S. H. W. Baker, 11, Foulser Road, Upper Tooting. Fanciers desirous of joining this up-to-date society should communicate with him.

The following are the classes for our First Feather show, to be held on 18th July, in Oddfellows' Hall, at 2.30, writes Mr. Wm. Clubb, sec. of the Falkirk and Dis. C.B.S.:—Plainheads, 2; Crest, 1; Crestbred, 1; Border Fancies, 2; Mules, 1; British birds, 3 (2 hardbills and 1 softbill); and foreign birds, 1. Mr. James Jeans (Camelon), will judge.

Our club is progressing splendidly, writes Mr. Fred Bowman, hon. sec. of the Yorkshire C.C. of Scotland, and has 34 members. We are holding our First Feather show on July 4th, and besides other specials the club is offering a silver medal for best bird. I shall be pleased if Mr. Margall will send me his new address as soon as possible.

The Bo'ness and Dis. F.A. are holding their annual show on November 7th, writes Mr. F. McGillivray, the sec., and the judges are as follows: for Norwich section, Mr. James Winter (Edinburgh); for Scotch Fancies, Mr. Thomas Todd (Partick); Border Fancies, Mr. Alex. Gilchrist (Coldstream); and for British Birds and Mules, Mr. L. J. Arrighi (Edinburgh).

Accidents to fanciers have been very common, unfortunately, just recently. Another victim of unkind fate is Mr. R. G. Joliffe, well known in Glasgow birdie circles, and Scotland generally, who, some little time ago, sustained injuries to the right arm and shoulder, which prevented him using his hand. We are pleased to learn, however, that our Scottish friend had a good recovery, and is now practically alright again.

We have received samples of the wild seeds (dandelion, thistle, plantain, and shepherd's purse, both pods and seed) from Mr. Davidson, of 94, Kirkland Street, New City Road, Glasgow. He advertises them in our columns, and to readers in need of the same we can recommend them. All are very good, the thistle seed especially so, it being English thistle of the right kind. British seed-eating birds will relish these wild seeds.

The members of the City of Hull C.B.S. have arranged their annual ramble for July 4th, to Drewton Dale, writes Mr. F. F. Potter, the hon. sec. Will members and friends please note that the train will leave H. and B. railway, Cannon Street, for South Cave, at 1.25 p.m., when we shall at once make our way by road to the Dales. Members and friends are cordially invited. We are hoping this will be the finest outing the society has had.

I regret to announce the death of the wife of Mr. J. W. Cleminson (late secretary of the Preston O.S., now vice-chairman), writes Mr. W. H. Heathcote, sec. of that society, which occurred after a painful and lingering illness on June 11th. Deceased was interred in Preston cemetery on June 15th. I beg to bespeak the sincerest sympathy of all who know Mr. Cleminson, which we tender to him and to his young family in their sad bereavement.

The photograph of the group of birdie men in Epping Forest, which appeared in our last issue, was the work of Mr. Bell. The inscription should have stated that the occasion was the annual ramble of the Leyton and Dis. C.B.S., with members of the North London and Walthamstow societies present by invitation. Judging by the account of the outing which appears in this number from the fluent pen of Mr. J. S. Clarke, a jolly time was spent.

Unsolicited Testimonial.—Mr. J F. Dewar, the well-known judge, writes as follows:—"Dear sir,—Peppers to hand. I have carefully compared them with samples of your last year's, which I considered the best ever sold, and I find this year's fully the equal of anything I ever saw. I feel sure sale will be a record one, and the results will more than sustain the high place your now celebrated Colour Feeds have attained.—Yours faithfully, (signed) J. F. Dewar." All good judges of Peppers will agree with Mr. Dewar that Ramsden's Pure Peppers are the best procurable. Sold free from admixture and fully guaranteed under the Food and Drug Adulteration Act. Beware of Peppers loaded with artificial colour and added oil. These oiled peppers may please the eye, but that's where the pleasure will stop. Buy Ramsden's Peppers and know you have the best—2s. per lb., 5 lbs. 7s. 6d., 22 lbs. 30s. All post or carriage paid.—J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London.—ADVT.

I have had 30 replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. J. Banks (Forest Hill), and still they are coming in. I regret I cannot reply to all individually.

We have received from Mr. J. C. Birch, the hon. sec. of Queens Park and Dis. C.B.A., a copy of the last quarterly balance sheet of that society. It still shows an increased balance in hand, and the society is, we hear, anticipating a further augmented balance from the present season.

The 1908 year-book of the Hastings United C.B.S. is a very neat production, and contains an excellent programme of lectures, shows, washing competitions, and the like. Bird lovers in the neighbourhood will be welcomed as members by the hon. sec., Mr. A. E. Godden (Ceylon House, Earl Street).

The City of Bradford O.S. has arranged an excellent list of members' show for the present season, to be held at the "Flying Dutchman" Hotel, Leeds Road. Good specials are given, and leading fanciers will judge. The first fixture is due to-day (June 20th), when Mr. J. S. Clarkson officiates.

The following have been elected judges for our open show on 21st November, writes Mr. James Kerr, hon. sec. of the City and County of Perth O.S.: for Crests and Yorkshires, Mr. C. Campbell; for Plainheads, Mr. A. Roberts; for Scotch Fancies, Messrs. Low and E. G. Wright; British and foreign, Mr. R. V. Raine.

The committee of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. have decided to give four open classes for Canaries—two for Yorkshires and two for Norwich—at their forthcoming young bird show, to be held at the Peckham Public Hall, on July 2nd, writes Mr. W. Hodson, hon. sec. of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. The Norwich classes are guaranteed. A splendid list of over 20 specials has been got together, including cup, medals, money prizes, and many useful articles. Schedules are now ready and will be sent on application to me at 209, Crystal Palace Road, East Dulwich, S.E.

I have been engaged to judge at the following shows, writes Mr. A. Wellings, of Prescot, and should be glad if you will give this list, because I am having constantly to refuse applications for the dates mentioned:—June 20th, Southport; 27th, Liverpool; July 1st, Chester; 4th, Bootle; 11th, Altrincham; 18th, Warrington; 25th, Penketh; August 1st, Runcorn; November 6th, Blackburn; 7th, Cleator Moore; 13th, Warrington; 14th, North Manchester; 20th, Wigan; 28th, Liverpool: December 9th, Chester; 11th, Pendleton; 18th, Widnes; 25th, Aberdeen; and January 1st, Kendal.

Sandiford's "Champion Royal Red Feeds" have always been bang in the front rank as producers of the kind of colour necessary to bring success on the show-bench, and this season's samples, which have just come to hand, are even better than ever for depth of richness of colour. The "Royal Red," which is the tasteless (sweet) pepper, is an astonishing deep yet bright colour, and the hot Natal is equally remarkable for its colour properties. Both seem free from all impurities, and are ground to just the exact fineness necessary to get the best possible results when mixed with the soft-food. Fanciers should make a point of seeing Sandiford's 1908 feeds and can get samples by sending their address to 296 and 298, North Road, Preston, Lancs. A Yellow Feed is also stocked. Mr. Sandiford writes that he has already supplied Messrs. Baker, Barnes, Bishop, Eckersley, Godley, Hodder, Irons, Morris, Spillman, Wilcock, and many other noted fanciers this season.

Provincial Societies—Note.

Will you kindly remind all societies who have not as yet applied for our specials to do so before July 1st, when the committee meet to allot the medals to 20 provincial shows.—H. LAMBERT BROWN, hon. sec. London and Provincial O.S. (64, Manor Park, Lee, London, S.E.)

Southern Yorkshire C.C.

Will the secretaries of societies who intend applying for the patronage of the above club kindly do so at once, as the committee will be alloting same at an early date. Owing to the cup competition, the champion section support will be given to ten shows.—J. W. RENNIE, hon. sec., the Royal Hotel, Mile End Road, E

REVIEW OF SCHEDULE.

Battersea.—July 1st, "Duchess of Devonshire."—Judge, Mr. J. Robson. 6 open classes: Yorks. 2, Nor. 2, Crest 2, and 13 members' classes. Prizes, 10/-, 5/-, 2/6. Fee, 1/6. Entries close June 26th to F. Easterling, 5, St. Mark's-road., Fulham.

Grimsby.—July 9th, in the People's Park (Charity Gala, under C.B.U. rules).—Judge, Mr. T. J. Ambrose. 8 classes: Nor. 2, Sell. 1, Singing 1, Brit. 2, For. 2. Prizes, 10/-, 5/-, 2/6. Entry fee, 1/6. Entries close July 2nd, to Mr. S. Lee, hon. sec., 335, Hainton-avenue, Grimsby.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

LAST week several societies were holding members' shows, and great has been the interest centred therein, the fact of there being no open first feather shows adding greatly to that interest. These shows will now be continued by one society or another over many weeks to come.

THE Halifax Society's members and friends turned up in large numbers to hear, and join in the discussion on "Colour-breeding and Colour-feeding" at their headquarters on June 6th. It was opened by Mr. Dean, of Great Horton, who took the more important point of colour-breeding for the first part, dealing with the green and cinnamon and their respective properties for the purpose, winding up with a general description of the art of colour-feeding. The discussion proved of very great interest, and elicited much useful information.

ONE of the most important questions asked was in respect to cinnamon-marked Norwich, which birds have seldom any pretensions to colour, the opinion of one fancier being that Cinnamon Norwich contain no green blood, whereas a very large quantity of cinnamon and cinnamon-marked Yorkshires contain a very appreciable quantity of green blood; green, in his opinion, was the sole fount for colour-breeding.

THE Bingley O.S. are making good strides with their society, which now totals over thirty members, and this entitles them to another delegate on the council of the Union.

ANOTHER society which is having life infused into it, is the Barnsley Society. At every meeting they are making one or two new members, and they have arranged for a lecture on colour-feeding by Mr. Cowgill, on July 4th; also for a members' show on July 18th, which they hope will bring more members, and particularly the old fanciers back to the fold.

SHIPLEY O.S. have arranged a splendid day out for to-morrow (Sunday). The train leaves Shipley at 8.40 a.m. for Stecton; then they drive to Addingham, Bolton Woods, Barden Tower, Burnsall, Grassington, and back to Steeton via Skipton. This is through some of the most beautiful country in the north, and given fine weather, the outing will be most enjoyable. Friends and fanciers will be welcome.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

CITY OF BELFAST N.C. AND Y.C.C.

Usual monthly meeting held in Avenue Hall, Garfield-street, on June 6th, the president, Mr. Adams, in the chair. Mr. H. W. Battye's name being highest on the list of nominations for judge, he had been written to, and a reply had been received stating that he would book that date (Nov. 21st). Will Irish show secretaries and show committees please note the date of show and avoid clashing.—A. South, Assistant Secretary.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

RESULT OF THE POLL.

Destination of Chief Prize in our Essay Competition.

Readers of Cage Birds will remember that the judges officiating upon the essays sent in for our recent competition were unable to unanimously agree upon the best essay amongst the selected winners in the four sections—in other words, to award the Four Guinea Painting, which was the chief prize. This problem we decided, rather than call in a referee, to submit for solution to our readers, by means of voting coupons, inserted in the issue containing the concluding instalments of the four leading essays. Well, the die is now cast, and we are this week enabled to announce the gentleman who by popular consent is held to be deserving of the principal prize. We had anticipated a very close fight for the honour, but the result is hardly creditable to our effort in the prophetic line, for the winner wins with something in hand, as our sporting contemporaries phrase it. Careful casting and scrutiny shows the result of the poll to be as follows:—

Mr. J. B. Waterman,
9, Herne Grove,
Dunstan's Road,
East Dulwich,
236 votes.

Mr. J. Jeffrey ..... 128 votes.
Mr. J. W. Dickson ..... 65 votes.
Mr. A. B. Forse ..... 30 votes.

We tender the winner our congratulations, and in due course will tender him something more substantial—the painting, to wit. We have also to express our gratitude to those readers who took the trouble to fill up and send in their coupons, thus helping us in so fair a way out of our difficulty.

FEDERATION OF LONDON SOCIETIES.

The proposal to form a federation of London societies proceeds apace. The third meeting of delegates was held on June 16th, Mr. H. E. Tringham (London and Counties O.A.), presiding. The proposed rules were then thoroughly discussed. The most important question to be considered was one arising out of rule 20, which provided that in the event of any party in a dispute being a member of the Cage Bird Union, he should have the right to appeal to that body. The point at issue was, therefore, whether or not the Federation should recognise the C.B.U. It was stated that no official correspondence had as yet taken place between the Federation and the Union. Mr. Adamthwaite (London and Counties O.A.), asked if the Federation were to be run "on its own," or in subjection to the Union? The Union might (he did not say would) over-rule the Federation, and what then? Mr. R. L. Crisp (City and Suburban A.C.B.), pointed out that when the Federation was first suggested rumour had it that the object was to cut the ground away from under the feet of the C.B.U., and one of the principal reasons for inserting the particular clause in rule 20 was to combat that idea. Mr. E. S. Lugg (Lewisham and Dis. C.B.S.), asked what was the use of the Federation at all if the C.B.U. were to be the final court of appeal? Mr. Tringham stated that upon the attitude of the C.B.U., depended entirely whether or not the Federation would get the support of the London societies. After further discussion, it was decided, on the motion of Mr. A. C. Burn (City and Suburban A. B. C.), to delete words giving rise to the discussion, pending the final completion of the rules and objects of the Federation, when the latter should be submitted to the Union for the consideration of that body.—The last business of the meeting was the election of a secretary (pro tem) in place of Mr. J. W. Rennie, resigned, owing to leaving the Metropolis. This office was finally undertaken by Mr. P. Adamthwaite, who, on consenting to do so, received the warm thanks of the delegates.

A Bird-catcher's Outfit.

Before the Reigate Bench on Saturday, June 13th, Thomas Bateman, a Clerkenwell bird-fancier, was fined £3 for trapping Nightingales. It was stated that his overcoat was lined with pockets, in which he had nineteen bags for birds and thirteen spring traps.

The Manchester Cuckoo.

I think old Longsight residents will be interested to know that the Cuckoo was both seen and heard this afternoon in this now unrural district, writes a correspondent in a Manchester contemporary. My mother, who has been a resident in this neighbourhood for nearly half a century, says she has never known of the Cuckoo being heard nearer town than Burnage Lane (this side of the city). To our great delight, whilst we were in the garden this afternoon we heard the Cuckoo's near note, and imagine our surprise to see two Cuckoos settle in our trees, where they remained about a minute. Then they flew across in the direction of Rusholme.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE. Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mules and Hybrids G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Pond and Lake Aviculture—Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. M.B.O.U., &c. Wild Bird Life H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Deformed Hind Claw.

Anxious.—It would have been a great help if you had enclosed a rough sketch, no matter how crude, to show the position of the claw. I am not quite sure that I know what you mean by "growing out crossways." Try small round perches, about the size of an ordinary lead pencil, for a week, and if it then appears to grip the perch a little better, keep it with these perches for a month or two, afterwards gradually increasing them to the proper size. Should there be no apparent improvement after a week, write again and enclose a sketch showing position of claw. All other points being equal, a slight deformity of this kind will certainly put the bird back on the show bench, but if the bird stood out well in front of its competitors, the claw may not alter its position in the prize list. It would all depend upon how the judge regarded these slight deformities.

A Ravenous Invalid.

E Whitehead.—You give extremely little data to form an opinion upon. You should have said, at least, how the bird had been fed prior to your finding it lying prostrate on bottom of cage, whether in a lean or plump condition of body, and what the condition of bowel—relaxed or otherwise. When you found it if it had probably had a fit, and I feel inclined to think it was the outcome of overfeeding. Anyway, try following for a week, and if it is not better then, write again and give above particulars, and also say whether bird is old or young. Give half a tea-spoonful of Canary seed, crushed if necessary, daily, and every second day a half teaspoonful of food you are now giving, with five drops of chemical food on it, and on alternate days give a very small piece of bread dipped in milk, with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it. Give a free supply of chickweed, or young groundsel tops, daily. Keep it supplied with gritty sand, and see the cage is free from red mites. In drinking water give eight drops of syrup of buckthorn on each of the first two days, and for the remainder of the week on alternate days four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid, and five of buckthorn—not both together, but separately on alternate days.

A Fourth Brood.

W.H.—It would certainly be running some risk of spoiling the hen for next season to take a fourth nest from her. Personally, I think two fairly average broods sufficient, and in any case I like to draw the line at three. Still, as your hen has not yet hatched a single chick, through no fault of her own, and seems so strong and vigorous, the risk would be at a minimum, and if you are prepared to take the risk, there is certainly time enough yet for you to get another nest. If you make the attempt, mate her at once with a stout, lusty, singing cock bird that has not been overworked this season. From your description she would certainly make a suitable hen for Mule-breeding, although other things being equal a yellow is preferable to a buff for mating.

Unavailing Treatment.

S.B.—The treatment is certainly not the most suitable, to say the least. A week of freedom from all treatment would perhaps do most good now. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple. Twice a week give a few grains of hemp, and twice a week on other days a small teaspoonful of egg-food, and for the first-named bird—the one that is not casting feathers—will mix with it three or four drops of cod liver oil emulsion. Give a few sprays of chickweed daily, a regular supply of gritty sand, and see the cages are free from insects. If birds will eat them, give also a couple of mealworms about every other day. This general treatment is for both birds, except that instead of giving egg-food to the bird that is losing feathers, substitute a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake every other day, with five drops of sherry in it. After a week on this diet, begin to give the first bird in drinking water one day twenty drops of whisky, two drops of tincture of gentian, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, next day four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid, and pure water on third day. Continue for a fortnight and then give four drops of tincture of steel twice a week for about another fortnight. For second bird give twelve drops chemical food in the water every second day, and on alternate days four drops tincture of steel. Continue for a fortnight, by which time no further treatment should be needed.

Doubtful Pairs.

Bath Waters.—Am much inclined to doubt genuineness of both pairs. Although you say the yellow cock was in full song I should still doubt his being a cock. Assuming the bird is a cock, you cannot do much more than you have being doing. Instead, however, of giving sponge cake with sherry, give a small teaspoonful of plain egg-food every second day, and in the drinking water as much Epsom salts for two days as will cover a sixpence, and after that four drops of tincture of steel every other day for a week. The "buff cock" I should regard as almost a certain hen. Try him with the same treatment as the above for a week or fortnight. Give both pairs two leaves of dandelion, and a little chickweed every day, but stop dandelion if, and as soon as, the hens go to nest. If the treatment does not soon make an alteration, get someone who understands the matter to look at the birds and tell you what sex they are.

Yorkshire Unwell.

F.J.M.—The bird is probably exposed to chills or draughts, which must be prevented before the bird will get any better. You should also examine its cage carefully for red mites, from which the bird does not seem to be quite free. Having attended to these matters, give, in addition to your staple mixture, a few grains of hemp twice a week, and every second day a small tea-poonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it twice a week. In drinking water give every second day twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, and on alternate days twelve drops of chemical food. Continue for a week, or until the bird's breathing is better. Then discontinue first-named mixture, and give in its place four drops of tincture of steel for another week in alternation with the chemical food. Give a spray of chickweed daily.

Becoming Rare.

Belfast Reader.—Your feeding is not sufficiently generous, which is doubtless the cause of the bird's feathers dropping out, and no others replacing them. Add a fourth part in bulk of summer rape to your staple of plain Canary seed, and give a few grains of hemp twice a week, a pinch of maw seed as often, and three times a week a small tea-poonful of crushed sponge cake, or egg-food. In the latter well mix two drops of cod liver oil emulsion twice a week. Give all these extras on different days so that the bird gets something different each day. Give a little green-food daily. In drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for two or three weeks. You will probably not see much improvement now until moulting season arrives, but if this treatment is persevered with, the plumage should be reproduced perfectly at the moult. See the cage is not exposed to draughts or infested with red-mite, as either of these will cause loss of plumage in this way.

A Disappointing Pair.

T.W.M.—I think it very probable your birds (or, at least, the hens) were late-hatched. It was not a good plan to get a pair both of which were hatched last year. It is always best, unless you are perfectly sure the birds are early-hatched ones, to mate last season's birds with those over a year old. A 1907 bird should be mated in 1908, with one hatched not later than 1906. You could easily have tested the egg by holding it between your eye and a strong light, and if it appeared transparent throw it out, and removed the nest for a few days, letting them try again. If the egg was dark and opaque it was fertile, and you might have let the hen hatch and rear the young one. If clear, when you removed the nest you could have left the birds together and given a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, or egg and biscuit food, every second day, sprinkling it with a few grain of gold of pleasure seed. On the alternate days you might have given a pinch of inga, three times a week a teaspoonful of hemp, and every day a spray of green-food; then in the drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight. Had you enclosed your address I would have sent a reply at once, as this may be delayed a week on account of the holidays.

Deserted Young.

S.B.—Instead of removing the young right away from the parents when the hen stopped feeding them, you should have put them in a nursery cage and hung them on the front of the breeding cage. As you do not mention anything about the cock I presume you were not keeping him with the hen. But even if you were not, he would probably have begun to feed the young more or less had they been hung on the cage as described when you introduced him to the hen for the next brood. At three weeks old the young would not be able to feed themselves entirely, and they are probably now suffering from lack of proper attention at this time. You should now give them a regular supply of plain Canary seed, and in addition a little egg-food and a small quantity of cracked hemp one day, and the next day a little scalded rape seed and a piece of bread dipped in milk and pressed nearly dry. Continue giving these soft foods for a week or two longer. Do not give a lot of green-food just yet; when you can obtain half-ripe plantain stalks you may safely begin to give these.

Not Hatching Properly.

E. B.—The chief cause of the young not hatching in your case seems to be a lack of vitality in the germ, as the chick does not appear to be very strongly developed. As the hen has already hatched out one brood and sat her full time on two others, I should scarcely not advise you to take another from her this year. But should you do so, give her twelve drops of Chemical Food in the drinking water every second day, until she has laid, and is beginning to sit again. Then on the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth days of incubation offer the hen a bath for a few minutes, and in the evening of each day take out the nest and dip the eggs in a cupful of warm water for a few moments. This should help them to hatch out better.

Moulting and Colouring.

G. P. M.—1. Your bird, which has been deep in moult since the middle of May, will not moult again in the autumn if kept in good health. He should resume his full song about the end of July, and will, therefore, be most useful for teaching the young cocks to sing, as he will probably be in full song right through the time they are moulting. 2. Yes, it is quite possible to colour-feed from the nest, if you have good feeding hens, which feed well on egg food. The result naturally depends wholly upon the idiosyncrasies of the hen, some of which are very whimsical about what they give the young, and it is no use standing to argue with them. When one has a good feeding hen it is best to pander to her whims as regards what she feeds with. If you wish to try to feed from the nest use only pure sweet tasteless pepper, without any added oil, and begin when the young are four or five days old to well mix a quarter of a teaspoonful of the pepper with a tablespoonful of egg food, gradually increasing the quantity of colour to half a teaspoonful to the same amount of egg. Keep your eye on the hen, and if you see she refuses to feed with this coloured egg, give her some more egg without the colour and leave her to her own choice.

Claw Out of Position.

Rustique.—Catch the bird, hold it firmly in the hand with the claw drawn out and held firmly between the tips of the thumb and forefinger. Have a saucer of very warm water, and another of cold water, side by side. Dip the whole foot in the warm water for a few moments and then withdraw it and immediately dip it in the cold. After holding it in the cold a few moments, again transfer it to the warm, and repeat the changes until it has been in the warm and cold water three times each. Be careful to finish in the cold, and keep it immersed for about a minute at the finish. Then dry the foot and gently work in a little olive oil. Give the bird rather small round perches until it secures a firm grip. Repeat the hot and cold bathing twice a week for a little time if necessary.

Preparing for Show, etc.

Paragon.—1. Certainly, in preparing young birds for first Feather Shows you should cage them off separately in order to get them steady and accustomed to the show cage. You may give them a run in the flight for a few days at a time, and the rest of the time keep them in moderately large cages, and as often as circumstances will permit give them a turn in a show cage for an hour or two. You should aim at getting them perfectly steady. With Yorkshires and similar birds of position you should also train them to pose as quickly and perfectly as possible. Remember that at first feather shows, the same as all others, with two birds equally balanced in all typical points, the best trained specimen will win. 2. As regards your friend's bird, which you think is troubled with mites, the cage should be thoroughly overhauled inside and out, and then re-painted or distempered, and varnished. Also allow the bird to bathe frequently. You may anoint the sores on the head with sulphur ointment. You ought to have said how this bird was fed and treated, as red mites are not often the cause of ulcers on the head and neck of a bird.

Young and Old.

Owdhamer.—1. The age of young, when finally removed from their parents, varies a good deal. They should not be taken away altogether until they can crack canary seed fairly well, and are able to feed themselves without difficulty. Somewhere about a month old is the usual age. It is better to leave them with the parents—that is, of course in a nursery cage, hung so that the parents can feed them—a few days too long than remove them a day too soon. 2. The hen that has started to wheeze after laying the first egg has probably been exposed to a draught; or got chilled from bathing too freely, perhaps. See that she is protected from these causes, and give 20 drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus in the water, well shaken together. Give this two days in every three for a week or so.

Hens with Diarrhœa.

F. E. Nutman.—I should strongly advise you, if the second hen you mention as weakening daily die, to have a post mortem on it to ascertain whether the trouble is a non-virulent form of septicæmia, which I rather suspect. Give them as much carbonate of bismuth as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash in the drinking water for a few days. Feed on a diet of plain canary seed, with a small piece of bread and milk each day, and give a few grains of hemp seed twice a week, and once a week substitute a small teaspoonful of scalded rape for the bread and milk. Withhold green food, and give the hen that appears to grow weaker two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on the bread and milk each day. Keep cage scrupulously clean, cover the bottoms with sawdust to absorb the moisture, and burn the sawdust at once when removed. After giving the bismuth for a few days if the diarrhœa is better, begin giving a piece of sulphate of iron every second day, and on the alternate days four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. As soon as the birds begin to get well over the trouble, drop off the bread and milk, and give instead a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake every other day.

Something in the Throat.

M. Russell.—The bird has so-called asthma, and has probably been exposed to draughts. You must see it is now quite protected from all draughts and chills; keep its cage perfectly clean, and examine the joints and crevices about the cage for signs of red-mites. If you find any of the latter, thoroughly disinfect the cage inside and out. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part of summer rape, give a few grains of hemp twice a week, and a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake twice a week. Give a little green-food daily. In the drinking water give every second day for a week, twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together. After this drop out the eucalyptus, and give in its place as much chlorate of potash as will lie on a sixpence, together with the whiskey and glycerine, as before, and give this every second day for another week, and on the alternate days in the second week twelve drops of chemical food.

Birds Separated.

J.W.M.—I do not remember all the details of your former query, the reply to which will doubtless appear in this issue. If the other reply does not give you details for feeding and treatment after this egg proved clear, you should now give the hen half a teaspoonful of egg-food, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it every day for a week, twice only during the week a few grains of hemp, and a few sprays of chickweed daily instead of daudelion. For staple food give a mixture of three parts Canary to one of rape. In the drinking water give her twelve drops of chemical food daily for a week. Treat the cock the same, with the exception of adding five drops of sherry to the egg-food every second day instead of cod liver oil, and give four drops of tincture of steel in the water every other day instead of the chemical food.

Sample of Pyrethrum.

J. W. M. — Although I would not positively assert as a fact that the root of which you send a sample is not real pyrethrum, I do not think it is. It looks much more like calumbra root. What you want is the powdered pyrethrum, and as freshly powdered as you can get it, to obtain the best results, and this you should find no difficulty whatever in procuring from any chemist. It would require a pestle and mortar to reduce the root you send to a powder, and when powdered it would not, I think, be anything like the colour of real pyrethrum powder. Try again at a chemist's, and ask for pyrethrum powder. If they do not stock it, then ask for "insect powder," or buy a box of Keating's.

Brevities.

Both Legs Defective (Silliw).—Unless bird is of special value, the best advice would be to destroy it—chloroforming is best. The hind claw is doubtless dislocated, and the defect a congenital one; although a medical man, or one conversant might reduce the trouble, the result is usually anything but satisfactory, and only causes unnecessary suffering to the birds. Should you wish to try any treatment, gently massage the claw and foot with warm olive oil twice a week, and give it a rather small perch, like a lead-pencil.

Egg Food Again (G. A. F.).—As I know practically nothing about the manufacture of egg "in forms," I cannot say whether it would be safe to give to Canaries in place of the usual boiled egg. Why not, if you are conversant with the process of manufacture, write our Editor a brief description for the benefit of one and all. I should particularly wish to know how or by what means the egg was preserved "for several weeks," before passing any opinion as regards its use.

Samples of Rape Seed (T. Parkinson).—No. 1 is a hot, mustardy sample that I would not use under any circumstances. No. 2 is an exceedingly strong-flavoured one, which may, perhaps, be due to newness, in which case it would improve greatly by being kept until next spring, providing you had a proper place to store a quantity. No. 3, although closely resembling the large black winter rape, is quite mild-flavoured. Whether really a sample of genuine rape I do not presume to say, but I should prefer it to either of the other two for immediate use.

Now Moulting (Rustique).—Have no doubt whatever the hen has gone into an early moult, and will be of no further use for breeding this year. Am sorry your first season should prove so disappointing, but do not stop at one discouragement. Next year your turn of luck may come. I do not think the birds having a free run of dandelion is the cause of all your worries, though I should much prefer chickweed, lettuce, or groundsel, in order named.

Advice on Breeding (A. Heron).—For immediate use turn up our issue of June 6th, and see reply to "Carrie Collard," which will be helpful to you. Will reply more fully in next issue.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

In Doubt about Plasmon.

G. Buchanan.—The Plasmon powder I recommend is the widely-advertised "Plasmon." It is a fine creamy-white powder. Sometimes I mix it dry into the food; sometimes (especially for syrup-feeding birds, or for ailing birds), I dissolve it, according to directions on the packet, sweeten it with honey, and give it the birds to drink. The oats, biscuit, arrowroot, cocoa, etc., which you mention contain a percentage of this Plasmon powder, and are manufactured and sold by its proprietors. If you ask any good grocer to supply you with a packet, you will soon see what the powder is like, also soon clear up the points you seem doubtful about.

Yellowhammers Under Canary.

Yellowhammer.—Have never yet tried rearing Yellowhammers under Canary hens, but I know that it can be done, and that without any particular trouble. A good friend of mine successfully got two broods raised in one season on much the same diet as that you outline—egg food, soaked rape, hemp, canary, shepherd's purse and chickweed. He mixed best ants' eggs with the egg food, and his hens ate it all up freely. I have no trouble in getting my own hens to tackle the ants' eggs when well incorporated with their soft food. Have several which eat and relish live ants' eggs, and enjoy mealworms cut in two. I believe it is generally possible to coax them on to these things. When the young leave the nest and commence to "pick up," you will find that canary seed is the only one they will touch at all freely; lightly crack it at first. Until they get well on this, you must give them a mixture of egg-food and some good softbill food containing plenty of ants' eggs, gradually leaving out the egg food. If you can lay hands on live ants' eggs (or know anyone who will gather them for you), they will do fine for them; cut-up mealworms should not be forgotten.

A Young Thrush's Leg.

P. J. B. Your letter is not particularly explicit, and I am somewhat doubtful whether there really is anything wrong with the leg of your young Thrush. Probably the "crossing of the legs" is but a natural accompaniment to its first childish efforts, so to speak, to walk about. Still, by the time you read this reply, you should be able to judge accurately as to whether your suspicion that one of the legs has something the matter with it is correct. I don't quite see how it could be a fracture (or breakage); and, if so, I am afraid you can do nothing except leave it to Nature to bring about a cure. If there seems to be leg weakness of some kind then you should keep the bird on something soft for a time (peat moss litter, or coarse-cut pine sawdust, or even short straw or hay), and for about a fortnight stir into its soft food (a tablespoonful), a small half-teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food, not giving too strong a dose at first. Allow all the live-food (mealworms, scoured gentles, black-beetles, etc.), you can. Bathing the leg (or legs) daily in strong whiskey and water, made just comfortably warm, might help greatly. You can use the same solution several times, adding a little more spirit, as necessary.

Catching Problems; and Others.

Larkhan.—1 and 2: The public (broadly speaking) can catch birds from August to February inclusive. In some districts, however, certain birds are protected all the year round. These, of course, must never be made captive. Further, the catcher should not venture on private ground without permission, or a prosecution for trespass may follow. As the list of protected birds varies in almost every county, it behoves the catcher to get a copy of the local bye-laws (which can be had from the magistrate's clerk, or town clerk, or local police station), and carefully study the same. Mr. Trower has published a guide to the laws governing bird-catching in different parts of the country; you can get a copy of this from the office of CAGE BIRDS for sevenpence. 3. The male Skylark raises the feathers on top of his head (the crest, or topping, as it is called) very frequently, especially when tame. But I believe it is not denied that the hen Skylark also at times does exactly the same thing. 4: A very young Skylark is always pale (or "dusty looking") in colour. In nest feathers he is very "downy" and "streaky" looking. Old birds vary in colour, though, according to season, and the big Larks which migrate to England from the continent are light coloured. A young Lark is never so stout in the leg as an old one, and is much finer in the nails and spur.

Swelling on Head.

D. R.—If the swelling is soft to the touch, and obviously filled with matter, then you should prick it with a stout needle, or, better still, open it with the sharp point of a penknife blade, or razor, and gently but thoroughly squeeze out the contents. Afterwards swab the place out well with warm water (if possible, just coloured with Condy's Fluid) and anoint it with a little boracic ointment, obtainable cheaply from the chemist. If it is a hard swelling, however, paint it very lightly once daily with tincture of iodine, which may cause it to disappear. Use a small camel-hair brush, and don't let the iodine get on any other part of the bird except the actual swelling. It is very powerful stuff.

Concerning Hen Bullfinches.

W. F. Buzza.—Equal parts of niger and hemp seems rather "thick" for everyday use, and it is safe to say your Bullie hens have had a proper gorge upon these very oily and stimulating seeds. Possibly they may have upset their livers. Pity, too, you do not use teazle; it is an excellent "corrective" seed, I feel convinced, and well liked by Finches. That this view is correct seems to be borne out by the fact that your Bullie hen, which has been kept mostly on Canary seed, is in excellent fettle. I should knock off the niger as a regular thing, and substitute teazle, likewise reduce the hemp to a third part. Let them have plenty of seeding wild plants. The medicine they need to liven them up is a course of a mild saline. Get an ounce of sulphate of soda from a chemist, and into each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water well mix as much as will lie on a shilling. Repeat next day, but giving only as much soda as will lie on a sixpence. This latter dose may be repeated once or twice on alternate days (plain water in between), if it seems necessary—be guided by the state of the bird's excreta; don't purge them too much. I may point out that to be quiet, and apparently "mopey," is also a sign that a hen is on the point of laying eggs. If this applies to your case, you alone can judge. Your expression, "too lazy to stir" hardly points that way.

Thrush and its Song.

E. C.—I think the best advice I can give you is to try a course of mild saline medicine, as advised "W. F. Buzza" this week. Birds are very liable to get a little off colour, or their system out of tone (call it what you will) when being fed on artificial food, and there is nothing like a dose or two of a saline to put things right. You should now and again mince the yolk of a hard-boiled egg finely with a fork (part of the white, too, if you like), and mix it among the stock-food. An occasional feed of "black beetles" would be greatly relished, too, no doubt. The currants would not harm him, but I never give many, personally. I don't think the absence of the Canary matters at all.

Food for a Thrush.

F. W. Stubbs.—The following is a method of feeding which will keep your Thrush in health and song. It is equally good for Blackbirds. This stock mixture any good seller of bird foods will mix for you (store it in tins): Game (or Pheasant or Partridge) meal, six parts; ground silkworm pupae, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, one part each, by measure. Get the game (or other) meal without grit. If you have any difficulty in doing so, finely crushed puppy cakes make an excellent substitute; or the "broken" biscuit obtainable from the grocer. If the latter be used, add an extra part of meat meal and silkworm pupae. Damp quantity required for daily use with a little water, or grated raw carrot, or cold boiled potato, or finely chopped lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or other green food in season. Vary them frequently, and add a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake, or half a hard-boiled egg, finely minced up, twice or so a week. Give three or four mealworms daily, and any other insects you can lay hands on, also ripe fruit and berries frequently, and according to season. Black-beetles and snails (especially snails dropped into boiling water for a few minutes, then chopped up), are much relished.

About a Hawfinch.

W. Taylor.—You will have no difficulty in rearing the Hawfinch by hand on the methods advised the enquirer about Chaffinches (to which you refer). When he starts to feed himself offer cracked hemp and sunflower, Canary, a little soft food, a meal-worm or two (pinch their heads well), and a few young garden peas, with seeding shepherd's-purse and chickweed. When adult, sunflower should be a Hawfinch's principal food—get it (the seed) sound and plump (with good kernels). Given this, and a mealworm or two every day, the bird asks for little more. The bird also appreciates hemp, safflower, linseed, canary, oats, and sometimes a little buck-wheat, dari, groats, summer rape, small maize, etc. His powerful beak makes short work of beech-mast, walnuts, plum and cherry stones, bawthorn, privet, etc., berries, and the like. One never need be fast for dainties acceptable to the Hawfinch. Green-food they are not particularly keen on, but appreciate a little young lettuce, watercress, chickweed, shepherd's-purse, also ripe apple, pear, etc., occasionally. They make an exception in favour of tender green garden peas, and these should be given in the pod when obtainable. Let the bird bathe freely.

Brevities.

Food for Blackbirds (Boy).—You will find the correct method of feeding Blackbirds given in reply to "F. W. Stubbs" this week.

"An Idiotic Hen Bullie" (G. Hayton).—It is no "fault" of yours. Some hen Bullies will persist in dropping their eggs on the cage floor, no matter what their owner may try—no kind or style of nest will tempt them to lay in it. I must confess that my own experience leads me to think that eggs laid at all sorts of odd intervals on the floor practically never prove fertile. I like a hen to lay regular clutches in a normal way.

Pied Blackbird (Johnnie).—A pied Blackbird is really of no particular value, unless very lightly marked indeed. They are so very common—quite the commonest of all rare-feathered birds. Pure white Blackies, if of good size and shape, are, of course, always worth something extra, though even they are not at all rare.

Chaffinch-Canary Hybrid (Observer).—Yes; like yourself, I saw that a Chaffinch-Canary Hybrid was recently awarded a first prize at an open show.—I have not seen this bird, however, so far as I know, so, of course, can offer no opinion as to its genuineness. I really do not know who bred it, or when it was bred. I do not think any record of this has appeared in CAGE BIRDS.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Budgerigars and Zebra Finches.

D.J.W.—(1) These birds are practically always with the dealers, and I know more than one of our advertisers who have stocks of imported specimens of these species. Of course, I cannot name any particular dealer; write those advertising in CAGE BIRDS, especially those making a speciality of Australian species. (2) It is always best to name your country when asking such a query. But given a suitable enclosure, such as you describe, providing it is sheltered on the north and east, both Budgerigars and Zebra Finches should successfully winter out of doors, without discomfort, anywhere in the United Kingdom. The aviary should have a shelter shed (weather proof), and half the roof of flight should be boarded in. Fix up your nesting receptacles both under the roof and in the shed; place your food vessels under the roof of flight, and not in the shed. The bath is better in the open part of flight. With such accommodation they should thrive, and produce their kind.

Feather-plucking Cockatoo.

G.J.—It would have been easier for me if you had given me particulars of your treatment. Give it several doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, with a two or three days' interval between each—quantity, one teaspoonful in the drinking water—but you must not continue this if the excreta becomes watery loose. Spray the parts two or three times weekly with Quassia solution, keeping the bird out of draught till dry. When not giving the magnesia, make drinking water colour of pale port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue for a month or more. Diet: Make up following seed mixture: Get two quarts each Canary seed and oats, and one quart each wheat, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seed; well mix, and keep up a regular supply. Also give so as to vary the diet, plain biscuit, stale bread, and boiled potato (all dry), ripe fruit, green food—such as green peas, lettuce, etc., as in season; nuts (shelled walnuts are best), a regular supply of grit and cuttlefish must also be kept up. Keep the bird as much occupied as possible, and supply rotten wood, cotton reels, etc., for it to play with and chew up. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. You must persevere with this treatment, as recovery cannot be rapid from longstanding cases, and under any circumstances the habit of feather plucking is most difficult to cure; in some cases it is never given up, and in the majority of cases it is the result of improper feeding.

Swollen Legs and Feet.

Nemo.—By far the better way would be for you to let a vet. see your bird; it is almost impossible to make a correct diagnosis, even from your full details. Brass cages are not good for birds, as verdigris is apt to congregate in the corners; however, I don't think this has had anything to do with the trouble. Am of the opinion that the back toe you speak of is ingrown back into the foot, and that this is the main cause of the trouble. On the other hand, it is quite possible the faulty cutting back of the past set up the trouble which the ingrown toe is merely aggravating—seeing counts for so much in such cases, that I really advise you to see a vet., who could possibly give the bird rapid relief from its pain and lameness. If you wish to treat it yourself, put bird on a course of Parrish's Chemical Food, make its drinking water the colour of pale port wine with it. Every third day for a fortnight omit the chemical food, and in lieu of same put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in drinking water. But this must be discontinued if the bird's voidings become watery loose. Foment its legs with a warm decoction of camomile flowers, drying the legs after each occasion. Keep it warm and free from draught. If any part should bleed badly, it must be anointed with Friar's Balsam, but it must be prevented from pecking at the wound for a few minutes; for any slight sore, anoint same after well cleansing with spermaceti ointment.

Cock Rosella Dying.

Grimston.—I have tried, but can give no reason; nor would such be possible from the details you supply without the aid of a post mortem. Leave the eggs to chance, and the probability is, if she hatches out, she will rear the majority (at any rate) of the young unaided. I do not think it would be advisable to add other birds to the aviary. To assist supply a little soft food mixture (without egg), plain biscuit, and ripe fruit in addition to present diet. I have had similar losses with other species that have been caused solely by sexual excitement. Other possible causes are a sudden sore and banging his head against top of aviary, or chasing some other occupant of the aviary and getting a blow on the head in return. Your treatment could not be improved upon, and your loss must have been consequent upon one of the above causes or the rupture of a blood vessel from some unexplained cause.

Cockatеels and Breeding.

M. A. L. (1) Cockatеels, in spite of the freedom with which they breed in some aviaries, are nevertheless, often very erratic breeders in others. Many pairs do little more than play at nesting, lay eggs off and on the whole of the season, and only hatch out an occasional youngster. Possibly they are interfering with one another a little, though as a rule they do not do so, and several pairs breed freely together in the same aviary. It is possible that your birds are brother and sister, and often such pairs never do anything worth speaking of in the nesting line, though handsome birds in appearance. If you have two aviaries, as I gather, put one pair in each, and hope for better things, otherwise the only way is to change till you get a free breeding pair. I have been through the same experience, and the very finest pair I ever saw (that is, as to handsome appearance, tight and rich plumage), were a pair that acted the same as yours. It is very annoying, but I fear there is no improving such birds. Have your nest boxes flat bottoms? If so you must alter their nest boxes, for Parrakeets must have concave bottoms, or the eggs roll about and get spoiled. (2) Very much the same applies to the Budgerigars also. Are you making use of your own young birds, and did you procure all your original stock from one source? If so, you are breeding from related pairs, and possibly this is the main cause of your trouble. In such case, I should advise selling off some of your young birds, and getting some imported birds to mix with them. Again, they may be overcrowded; you do not give size of the aviary—how many husks have you up? There should be at least double the number of husks that you have pairs of birds. If your stock is healthy, they will settle down and do well a little later; keep up a good supply of cuttlefish, old mortar rubbish, etc., and this should check egg binding. Possibly the cold nights of a short while ago were responsible for much of the trouble. Your dietary for both birds is ample, but at this season of the year give them as much grass in the ear as they will eat, also leaves of fresh lettuce. I should advise you to get from CAGE BIRDS Office the Handbook recently issued on these two species; it is 6d. post free, and I am sure you'll find it very helpful.

Budgerigars and Finches.

Hildebrand.—You make no mention of green-food, especially grass flowers or grass in the ear, which would help to relieve the trouble as would occasionally putting a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the drinking water. It is most unsafe to keep Budgerigars with Finches; Budgies are worse than some species of large Parrakeets. At times they will be quite amiable for several years, and then run amok and slaughter or maim everything they can, and in spite of some amiable pairs, as a rule they are dangerous company at all times for Finches. There are not many Foreigners as regular breeders as Zebras, Cutthroats, and Budgies, but the following should all do well on the simple Finch treatment in your aviary, and also most of them breed. Grey and White Java Sparrows, Bengalese, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Spice Birds, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins, Red-headed Finches, with Zebra, Grey, and Orange-cheeked Waxbills. A half-dozen Weavers of sorts would add colour to the aviary, and I have not found them pugnacious save with their own kind. You have comfortable space for about 20 breeding pairs, only one each, and the better plan is to dispose of the bulk of the young as they become adult, as they frequently interfere with their parents' further nesting arrangements.

Queen Parrakeet.

M.C.—Glad to note there is a slight improvement; you must continue the treatment in all particulars at present. I think it would be a good plan to have a curtain hanging over one corner of the cage, screening one end of the perch, and to extend round to the back of cage, say six inches. This would give it a warm corner to rest in. I always provide such for my caged Parrots all the year round. You must foment the eyes with the camomile decoction as soon they become caked up, and dry as much as possible after each occasion. You must keep on with the solution till the caking over ceases. Then for a few days use the rose water and zinc solution. Otherwise, you must continue to treat as per previous reply. I hope you'll succeed in saving the bird; it was in a bad way, indeed, when you first wrote, and is by no means "out of the wood yet." I should certainly keep it isolated as much as possible from any other birds you have, and if you do lose it, well sterilise its cage before using it for another bird. It would probably take a little plain biscuit from you; if so, put 10 to 20 drops of Parrish's Chemical Food on it, and let it partially soak in. Keep her cage clean, and the bird as quiet as possible; the case is certainly not hopeless, and we must hope for the best.

Diet for Cardinals.

Your Well Wisher.—I diet my Cardinals as under, and they thrive thereon, having been in my outdoor aviary for from five to eight years, and in the best of condition all the while. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary, white millet, dari, wheat, oats, hemp, and sunflower seeds—half the bulk of the mixture to be Canary and millet, the half to be equal parts of the kinds named. I also give ripe fruit, green-food (they eat a good lot of lettuce), soft food, and three or four mealworms per bird daily. Also unlimited cuttlefish, and grit. They are very fond of bathing, and in the outdoor aviary bathe at least twice a day at this season. If caged, lay the bath outside the cage, and let them have a good daily bath at least. Possibly you have a hen bird, the outward sexual difference of several species being almost infinitesimal; so much so that the trained eye fails at times to pick them out. The cage for a Cardinal ought to be 2½ ft. long, 1½ ft. deep, and 1½ to 2 ft. high.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Young Canary (Winifred Brunton).—You have acted quite correctly in giving full details of illness of this and other birds. I regret to say that the result of my examination is that you have bird fever in your room. Nothing but fumigation with sulphur and washing with boric acid solution will put a stop to it.

PARK & LAKE AVICULTURE

Hen Woodquest Mating.

John Hobson.—Yes, it is a rare occurrence for a hen "Woodquest," or Wood Pigeon, to mate with a common Pigeon, but it is the only way in which the cross between the two species has been obtained, and then only twice. One such Hybrid, a fine male, coloured like a Splashed Tippler, has been long on view in the Western Aviary at the Zoo, along with offspring bred from him and a common Pigeon, for he is to this extent fertile. Your Hybrid is therefore a prize to be proud of, and you should try to breed from it when it grows up. It would also be of interest to record what colour it turns out, and what is the colour of its father. Also, was its mother hand-reared? The Wood Pigeon mother of the bird at the Zoo, which was bred by Mr. P. St. John M. Podmore, was a hand-reared bird. The other day I read of a case of a cock Homer being seen courting a wild hen Wood Pigeon, with apparent success, in a London Park.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Death of Parrot (A. A. Dunbar).—We find that many, personally. I don't think the absence of issue for April 11th, page 376. Evidently you overlooked this, so we repeat the information herewith: "Disease of liver, and consequent malnutrition."

Cutting (A. McQuarrie).—We are exceedingly obliged to you.

Lecture (G. R. Danich).—Accept our thanks for your kindness and the trouble you have taken.

Photo (H. S. Davies).—We have to acknowledge receipt of the excellent photograph you send us, and shall hope to publish same in the near future.

Stocking Aviary (J. T., Amateur).—Will you kindly let us know in what direction your fancy lies (whether for Canaries, British, or Foreign birds), when we will get your question answered. It was, by-the-bye, wrongly addressed to our Mr. Finn.

The Norwich and Cinnamon Blood (C. Draper).—Many thanks for your kindness in sending us this paper, which we will utilise at the earliest possible moment. We shall be glad to receive the discussion.

Colour Food, and Oil (Novice).—By far your best plan would be to write direct to the seller of this colour-food, and ask his advice on the point. He would tell you the best method to use his feed to the best possible advantage. In "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (post free, sevenpence) you will find explained all the points about colour-feeding, both old and young birds.

IN THE COURTS.

CAGED NIGHTINGALES AT BLACKBURN.

The Position of Purchasers.

At the Blackburn Borough Police Court on June 19th, Jeffrey Walsh, the well-known bird dealer, was summoned for having in his possession certain wild birds.

Mr. J. G. Radcliffe, who prosecuted on behalf of the R.S.P.C.A., said, according to the "Northern Daily Telegraph," that the case was brought under the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1883, which provided that between May 1 and August 1 it was unlawful to take certain birds such as Nightingales. The defendant had received a consignment of four Nightingales, and on arrival at Blackburn it was seen that their plumage was green, and that when caged they beat themselves against the bars, proving that they were wild and had been recently taken. Formerly it was extremely difficult to prove a case like this, except when the bird-catcher was caught red-handed, but owing to a recent decision in the Divisional Court it was held that if the birds were of fair plumage and gave evidences of wildness, there was a prima facie case of their having been recently taken. The proceeding had been taken by the R.S.P.C.A. in order to stop the consigning of these birds and the consequent denuding of the country of its sweetest songsters.

Inspector Gent, of the R.S.P.C.A., gave evidences of defendant receiving a consignment of four Nightingales. The consignment came from Cambridgeshire, and defendant told him the birds had cost 10s. each.—Questioned by Mr. Carter, who defended, witness admitted that there was no evidence to show when these birds were caught.—Detective Charles corroborated, and said that the defendant remarked during the conversation with Inspector Gent that Nightingales could not be bred in captivity. Mr. Carter said that the magistrates had to satisfy themselves not only that these birds were Nightingales, but also that they had been recently caught. There had been absolutely no evidence of that.

The defendant said he had been in business as a bird specialist for nine years. He was connected with several bird societies, several of which had as their object the protection of wild birds. These Nightingales were sent on approval, and he could tell from their appearance that they had been in captivity for some time. When they were transferred to the cage they fluttered very little, but immediately took food and water. A wild bird would have beat itself against the bars for weeks—perhaps months. Since he received the birds he had sold one to a clergyman.

Inspector Gent and Detective Charles, recalled, said it was an "absolute fabrication" to say that the birds were given food and water in their presence when they arrived at Blackburn.—Defendant repeated that he gave the birds food and water in the presence of the two witnesses. The latter might not have noticed it.

The Bench, after considering in private, were of the opinion that the birds had been recently taken, and fined defendant 40s. and costs—10s. for each bird.

Mr. Radcliffe made an application for the birds to be forfeited and liberated, observing jocularly, "Why not have them in Blackburn Park?"—The Bench, however, refused the application.

Edwin Christopherson, Belle Vue Street, was summoned in an identically similar case, two Nightingales having been consigned to defendant, who explained that he had simply written for the birds for another person. The Bench, however, fined him 40s. and costs, and told Inspector Gent to draw the attention of his society to the people who were consigning these birds to this district.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN APPEAL BY MR. J. H. PAYNE.

SIR,—Kindly allow me space to thank Mr. Payne and those who sent me birds; they have done me a great kindness. I have been a fancier for the last 56 years, being now 75 years of age. Allow me to especially thank the person who sent me the Border Fancies, as they are the only ones I have been able to breed from yet. JAMES BRIDGMAN.

A DISCLAIMER FROM THE WEST BROMWICH AND DIST. C.B.S.

SIR,—In our paper, CAGE BIRDS, we have noticed several times lately that we are about to hold an inter-club show with Wolverhampton Society; this is quite a mistake on their part. It was announced in the Fancy Press before it had been brought before our members and it was decided not to hold an inter-club show with them.

A REDPOLL TAKES A FATAL BATH.

SIR,—The following may interest some of the many readers of CAGE BIRDS. On Sunday, June 14th, I was taking a stroll along a marshy bank when I observed a little bird just after it had got out of a small pool of water in which it had been bathing. It was in such a wet condition that it was absolutely unable to fly, and I had no delay in catching it. It was a Redpoll in full adult plumage. I took it home and it has taken well to cage life. E. BUTLER.

CAUSE AND CURE OF BLINDNESS IN CRESTED CANARIES.

SIR,—I believe that Mr. George Peters, in his lecture on "The Evolution of the Canary," has solved the puzzle as to what causes blindness in Canaries, and gives also the remedy by which it may be disposed of. When Canaries were first bred for Crests a Plain-head hen of any breed was used for mating with Crested cocks, but some breeders found out that larger crests were obtained when Crests were paired to Crest-breds. I think it quite likely that in preparing for exhibition a little pressure of the finger on the centre of the crest to improve shape may act on the bird's brain and cause blindness, and thus eventually it becomes hereditary. His exhibition of the skulls of crested and non-crested birds must have been very instructive.

THE SLAUGHTER OF SONG BIRDS.

SIR,—On looking over my evening paper I was painfully interested in reading an article bearing the above title, and thought it would be equally interesting to your many readers. It may, too, bring forth an expression of opinion from lovers of our feathered friends, such as may, in some measure, stay the hand of the assassin before it is too late. Only recently Professor Corselle, of Chambery, in France, addressed an appeal to the public, warning them that if farmers, gamekeepers, and poachers continued in their conduct they would soon have exterminated all the small birds in the country. As a proof of the necessity for legislative action, he declared that thousands of Larks were killed and sold at 3d. per dozen. It will doubtless come as a surprise to many Britishers to learn, on the authority of a well-known naturalist of literary distinction, that the small birds that are driven down into Cornwall in the winter time through stress of weather are massacred there in thousands, not merely by boys, but also by grown-up people. Mr. W. H. Hudson, in a book called "The Land's End" (in which he records his impressions of two or three recent winters spent in St. Ives and the neighbourhood), protests against the cold-blooded barbarity which is shown to the birds by the inhabitants. He says that whenever there is a hard winter, as in 1906, the small birds are driven down to the extremity of the west by tens of thousands, large numbers perishing miserably of cold and hunger in the fields and moors. But in St. Ives their destruction is carried out on a plan of wholesale slaughter as a recognised pastime. This is the modus operandi: each person buys a handful of small fish-hooks manufactured for the purpose and sold at a penny a dozen; from ten to twenty baited hooks are fastened with short threads to a string, two or three feet long, called a "teagle," and placed on a strip of ground from which the snow has been cleared. To these strips of mould, or turf, the birds fly and seize the hooks; and so blind to danger are they made by hunger that they are not deterred by the frantic struggles of those already hooked. Many birds succeed in freeing themselves by breaking the thread in their struggles, but always with that bit of barbed, bent wire in their mouths or stomachs, which must eventually cause their death. Mr. Hudson found, on making enquiries of some of these "sportsmen," that while they killed the Starlings, Blackbirds and Thrushes, they often liberated the smaller species which they caught. "One man, the most enthusiastic bird-catchers with the teagle in the place, after removing the hook from the mouth or gullet of the bird he does not want, takes the two little mandibles between his thumbs and forefingers and wrenches the face open, then tosses the bird up to fly away, a little distance, soon to drop down and perish in agony." Small birds that are not wanted, he says, will sometimes return after being liberated and get caught again; those he liberates will trouble him no more. It is also a common thing for parents to buy little hooks and wires and give them as presents to their boys, with the result, says Mr. Hudson, that there are always maimed birds to be seen at St. Ives, painfully hopping about or crawling with the help of their wings in search of food. Bush-beating—a barbarous sport which is almost extinct elsewhere in England—is still common in Cornwall, and the birds fall easy victims in a country which has few trees and where the birds flock at nightfall to the bushes in sheltered spots. And though there is a minority, which is sickened at the cruelty of the thing, the cruelty continues, and those who practice it are not condemned by public opinion. It is to be hoped that Mr. Hudson's efforts on behalf of the smaller birds will be as successful as Mr. Ebblethwaite's (on behalf of the Seagulls in and around St. Ives) were.

A METHOD OF CLEANING SAND.

SIR,—The way I clean sand is as follows:—I sift the sand through the sieve with holes just large enough to let what I want through. Then I throw this into a bowl and fill it with water; then pour the water off. The latter will carry the dust and dirt with it. I repeat this operation till clean. Afterwards I place the sand (or grit, as it is now) on some paper in the sun, and let it dry. I find it always very clean. I hope this may interest some reader. A. SHARP.

COLOUR-FEEDING GETS SOME "HARD KNOCKS."

SIR,—Being a constant reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, I may say I am not a colour-feeder, and never shall be. I have been a bird-breeder close on 40 years now. Talk about the Wild Birds' Protection Act, I think the poor Canaries want protection at home first. Just for the sake of a few honours, or a few coppers, these poor, innocent birds have to take all kinds of stuff. A recent lecturer has stated that colour-feeding is interesting and honest. Well, it may be interesting to some, but I fail to see where the honesty comes in. I say, show a bird in its true colours, and then you feel as though you were looking at a bird, and not a lot of false feathers. All I can say about colour-feeders is that they may be fanciers but they are not bird-lovers. S. C.

MORE ABOUT THE LITTLE OWL.

SIR,—During the Whitsun holidays a friend visited this district and had a good run round the haunts of the Little Owl. All the old trees in this district were visited and those with holes in were climbed to catch a glimpse of this bird nesting. Whenever there was a nest in the tree it could soon be located, by the mess on the ground, and the remains of all kinds of small birds, rats, mice, and mole skins, and pellets. One nest was found with five eggs in, hard sat upon, and the old bird was turned off, but the hole was down too low to get a photo of it. Another nest was found close by, but this had only two eggs in. The next tree to be examined was one of a group, and, in approaching, a strong smell was noticed, and on climbing the tree, there was the nest of three eggs, with the old bird killed on the nest and in a far stage of decomposition. This nest was too low down in the tree for the boys to reach, so they had killed the old one, which they generally do (old and young) when they find they cannot get them. Another nest was found with the old bird just killed, and two young ones dead beside her, with one young one alive about two weeks old, badly crying out for food. This one was brought away, and is now being hand-fed. Another nest a few fields further on was found with four eggs in and the old one dead. This nest was also out of reach of the boys; that's why, no doubt, it had been served like the others. Further on another nest with five eggs in was found safe. Another nest in which young could be heard was found. The hole was some yards up the tree, but went down nearly to the ground. These young could not be seen or got. Someone had been having a good try to get them, however, as there were several holes bored in the tree trunk near the ground. But as the nesting hole was in the middle of the larger tree, they had given up their attempt in disgust. So no doubt these birds will be able to escape destruction. Some two miles away three other nests were found with both eggs and young in them. Little Owls are not this season so numerous as last year; neither have I heard of so many being taken. Their nests are so easily found (especially if with young) by the remains of so many birds, etc., under the trees; the young make a big noise, too. T. H. KINCH.

WHY ARE THE EGGS NOT FERTILE?

SIR,—Will you please allow me a little space in your paper about a Bullfinch? Can any reader of CAGE BIRDS explain the reason why I do not get fertile eggs from my hen Bullfinch? She will lay without any trouble, and in the nest; and I have known her to sit a fortnight (of course, its never her own). I have put a cock Greenfinch with her, and have put her with a dark cock Canary in full song. I have seen both the above pair up with her time after time. It was just the same last year—no good eggs.

IS THE HOOPOE A BRITISH BIRD?

SIR.—I read with great interest Mr. Langley's notes on this subject. In looking up an encyclopædia I found an article on the Hoopoe. The Hoopoe, it said, is of a genus of Insessorial birds, belonging to the group tenuirostres, and forming part of the special family upupidæ. In the genus upupa the bill is slender and curved throughout, and the nostrils are covered by a scale. The tarsi are invested with broad scales, or plates, and the tail is long and even; the outer toe is longer than the inner one, and the claw of the hinder toe is long and straight. The bird derives its name from its cry, and the common species is found in North Africa, Europe, and Asia, though rarely in England. The Hoopoe attains the length of 13 inches. Its colours are white, buff and black. It has a crest of feathers of a reddish buff hue, tipped with black. The nest is built in hollow trees, and the eggs are of light grey. They vary from four to five, and the young are hatched in June. I hope these notes will interest some or other of your many readers.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE GREENFINCH.

SIR,—As a reader of CAGE BIRDS, I saw G.G. gave a splendid description of "Greenie" or the Greenfinch. It just suited me, being an owner and exhibitor of British birds and a successful prize-taker in Greenfinch and Chaffinch classes especially. My advice is: keep them their natural colour; look to them well, not forgetting the sunflower seed. They may be got up in fine form. I don't believe in colour-feeding British birds. If it is done let them have a Class at the shows to themselves. Colour-feeding is expensive; the working man cannot afford it. I am breeding from a pair of Greenfinches. They paired up and laid five eggs, four of which came out to-day (Monday). The cock bird won me 1st prize at Folkestone in a large class. He is a beauty—like polished box-wood. He has fine type, and wing bars like 18-carat gold. I reared him by a hen Canary, which brought up four. It was as much as she cared for, as the young Britisher takes its food off the mother different to a young Canary; it snatches it and makes the hen Canary sore on the bill. The hen is a fine one, no doubt a caught bird. What made me so keen on greenie was this: some 12 years ago I let a Scotch Fancy hen Canary bring up a nest of Greenies. They came along fine. After a time, not knowing their value on the bench, I let them fly. A man afterwards caught one and asked me if I had lost it? I told him he might have it. He then sold it to a man in London, who entered it at the Aquarium Show. It took 2nd prize and was claimed at £1. After hearing that I was keen on Greenfinches, and have been ever since, and have made good figures of them. I have had the same success with Chaffinches, and have had some really grand ones. The way to get large Chaffinches and Greenies is to let a Canary rear them; you then get size which counts on the show bench. C. OSBORNE.

"SWEATING" HENS AND THEIR CAUSE.

SIR,—I see that Mr. Crisp has recently dwelt lightly upon sweating hens. He has said: "We are told that hens are physiologically unable to sweat, but that the appearance is owing to the condensation of the breath of the brood." In another lecture he says: "Sweating is mostly caused by the hen sitting too closely. I have been informed on good authority that it is impossible for a hen to sweat,' and that this sweated appearance is caused by the congealed breath of the closely-covered young; but this I cannot vouch for as I am luckily not troubled with this in my room." Now this is my idea, only Mr. Crisp's is congealed condensation of the breath, and mine diarrhœa of the young. Could he not prevail on his informant to give us his ideas, and some taxidermist might tell us for a certainty whether a bird's skin has or has not been made for "sweating."?

TWO QUESTIONS ON OUR RECENT WINNING ESSAYS.

SIR,—I think in every way you are to be congratulated on having been the means of publishing four such admirable essays as you have recently published on four distinct subjects of importance to the Fancy. You are also to be congratulated on your decision to leave the final vote as to their merits in the hands of your readers. The essays are useful and well written. A fancier is and ought to be always learning, and I confess I have had great pleasure and profit in sitting at the feet of these teachers. I do not propose now, or even after the result of the voting is announced, to criticise the papers, although I think great good would come if other fanciers would discuss, through the medium of your valuable paper, various points raised in the essays. I should, however, like to ask two questions: 1. Mr. Dickson referred to certain strains of Muling hens being valuable in the production of clear and light Mules, while other strains are not. Does he (or any other fancier) think that the valuable strains—of clear hens, I mean—have Cinnamon blood in them, and how much? And are they pink-eyed? 2. Could Mr. Jeffrey not have bred mealworms at a moderate cost?

OLD HAND.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a small space in your valuable paper for a final reply to "One Who Knows." If he has an axe to grind with me he can grind it at Bristol. He also spoke about my having a free advertisement by signing my name. If I had not done so he would not have replied, as he does not reply to any of the other correspondents on the same subject; which fact clearly shows it is just an act of the petty spite or jealousy on his part, having to hide as he does, behind a nom de plume to throw out what he would be afraid to say in the open. Now, Sir, I would also like to inform Mr. "One Who Knows" that my name is the same this year as it was last; I have never had any occasion to change it yet, nor to hide behind any other name to say anything I wanted to. I shall not reply to your correspondent again unless he has the courage to sign his name in full, as "unknowns" are no good to themselves or to any Cage Bird Society, and are hardly worth bothering oneself about.

T. KEEGAN.

SIR,—Allow me a small space in your valuable paper re the above. I am of opinion that it should be abolished. We have a very strong membership of fanciers, but they will not allow the C.B.U. to handle their affairs. I am a member of the W.C.B.C., and I think that that is sufficient. Why should not this club be sufficient for Wales? We do not require, in my opinion, a club such as the C.B.U. to bind us to fall in with them. First of all, what has the C.B.U. done? I have not heard of any particular work done, and I should think they have had plenty of time to show what stuff they are composed of. I will not in future belong to any society which is held or handled by the C.B.U. men; therefore, I will drop out of the society which I belong to. I am a little sorry for the way in which "One Who Knows" has answered Mr. Keegan. My opinion of him is not a very high one. Why doesn't he sign his name for people to know? He says "T. Keegan" probably writes only to have his name in print. "T.K." showed himself a gentleman and said what he thought of the C.B.U., and very likely gave the opinion of many hundreds. I am not a lover of correspondence, but I could not allow this to pass, as I am of opinion that the C.B.U. is useless, which has been proved so undoubtedly in many districts. Now, "One Who Knows," I am not exactly a novice; I have been in the Fancy now for about 21 years. I hope to have the opinion of others on this matter. J. B. REES.

BREEDING FOR COLOUR: A PROBLEM IN POINT.

SIR,—A friend of mine, a prominent breeder of Scotch Fancy Canaries, has paired up two self, green Scotch Fancies—a yellow cock and buff hen They have only had one young one and, strange to say, it is a clear yellow. Last year several young were reared from this same cock paired to a lightly-coloured hen, and all birds were either self green or heavily marked. How is above case for breeding for colour? YELLOW-GREEN.

IS IT A RECORD?

SIR,—Your correspondent, "Son of the Rock," in the issue of June 13th, has not the hen which has yet broken the record, as I have a hen which laid four eggs in the first round and brought off three chicks, all of which are doing well. In the second round she laid seven eggs consecutively and brought off seven chicks, which are now three weeks old, and she is now about to go to nest again. I thought this might be interesting, and they can be seen by anyone who would care to do so, at my address, 196, Gladstone Avenue, Noel Park, London, N.

ACONITE FOR CAGE BIRDS.

SIR,—I have read somewhere articles anent the use of aconite in the treatment and cure of ailments peculiar to the feathered tribe, and having had a very wide and comprehensive experience in the application of that peerless curative as an agent in the rapid and successful elimination of every form of functional and organic derangement to which the animal physique is liable (an experience which extends over a range of subjects comprising monkeys, dogs, cats, birds, and, of course, the "Lords of creation"); perhaps a few practical remarks in regard to the history and uses, and the physiological and topical effects of this remarkable remedial agent will prove of interest to your numerous readers having the physical welfare of our feathered friends at heart. Aconitum pappellus, or Monkshood, is common to English woods, and is frequently met with in the fields, hedgerows, and cottage gardens. The root bears a striking resemblance to horse-radish, and has been partaken of by ignorant agriculturists in mistake for horse-radish, and needless to say with disastrous results. The active poisonous element of aconite is an alkaloid known as "aconitia"—a virulent poison—exercising a remarkable effect over the nervous and muscular system, quickly inducing constriction of the throat, numbness and paralysis of the limbs, convulsions, and, in the case of an overdose, death. Scientists and pharmacists, while recognising the inestimable curative virtues possessed by the remarkable plant, have also had to admit the presence and death-dealing virulence of the alkaloid "aconitia," which element they have failed to eliminate. Consequently, the tincture of aconite, B.P., to-day contains the active poisonous element aconitia, 16 drops of which—the tincture—is considered the full maximum, if not dangerous, dose for an adult. I make these remarks in order that fanciers may not be tempted to "play tricks" on the delicate and highly-susceptible organs of their little charges who, through the ill-advised attention of their owners, might be driven to the extremity of performing unbirdlike acrobatic feats upon their backs in all likelihood, finishing up their perch careers at the first performance. So much for the dark side of the subject. Ten years ago I became acquainted with a preparation of aconite, which, by a peculiar method of treatment had been entirely denuded of "aconitia," and therefore, non-poisonous; it was further claimed that, in addition to being minus of even a trace of "aconitia," the curative properties had been greatly increased. Needless to say, I entered upon the use of the "new aconite" tentatively, and with many misgivings; but, the more widely I employed it, the more firmly I became convinced of its marked superiority over the old tincture, and its absolute safety in use. Thus, I have continued with its use, resuscitating the apparently dying, and diverse members of creation, from infants to adults, mastiffs to diminutive toy terriers, poultry to cage birds. Under its influence and timely administration all have benefited alike, and have become, chirpy, vivacious, cheerful and appreciative members of—to them—a happier existence. Furthermore, I have yet to meet with any form of inflammatory, congestive, or morbid condition which cannot be entirely mastered and eradicated in from two to twenty-four hours. This, of course, has reference to acute wrong conditions only, and applies equally to all warm-blooded organisms of whatever form or species. B. WOODCOCK.

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—I have been expecting to see more of your many readers give their views on dandelion. I notice some two weeks since one of your readers wanted to know what killed his young birds. He had been giving them dandelion leaves eight or ten inches long. Well, I should certainly say the dandelion killed them, it being rank and overgrown. I suppose they took inflammation. I will say more about this question later on. I see Mr. Claude St. John has written: "The very idea of discarding such a popular green-food was pooh poohed by not a few who prided themselves on their practical experience; but many of the critics have gradually come to learn that there's 'summat in it . . .' Exactly how it acts or what its peculiar properties are that affect birds badly," etc. Will he kindly explain this in detail? I will then answer him, and will give my results for 20 seasons running. If, as Mr. St. John says, he does not profess to know, how can he say that it was the dandelion? Will he kindly say, if he prefers watercress, what results he got from using watercress? Did he keep cock and hen together when feeding? I shall be pleased if he will answer, and I will give him a reply. A. MATHER.

SIR,—In answer to "Tempus Omnia Revelat," I wonder in what part of the country he lives? It must be an ideal place, everything must be very forward, especially considering the bad weather we had in the first part of spring! He says you should only use dandelion from the open fields. Well, up here, in Yorkshire, we cannot find the smallest leaf until the end of April. As I said in my last letter, I give it when I pair up on the 17th to 21st March, and I find it then in sheltered places, such as under a wall with a south aspect. But I also find that very few of these roots flower. And the open field roots do not flower "well"; they are very sparse until the end of May. I can also tell this writer that if the wild birds do feed up here upon greenfood, they do it like Canaries, with egg-food, viz., from the crop, as I have watched nests of young of various species and have never seen a dandelion head or leaf brought to the nest, even when the flowers have been in full bloom. They do, I believe, give them, or the young get them after they have left the nest, but then they are free, and have plenty of room to get about in, which a cage bird has not. As regards his other seeds, what are they at that time of year? Perhaps he means those put in the earth by the farmer man! I can also say, like Mr. Claude St. John (only I will not say every day in the year; I think that a figure of speech), that I can nearly reach it (dandelion) out of bed! I will add the result of my breeding operations without the use of dandelion, etc. To the end of the second round, with ten hens and five cocks, I have 24 young on seed. 15 more on the sticks, and 13 in the nest under a fortnight old.

B. H. CLEGG.

SIR,—It may ease Mr. St. John's mind a little if I say that my remarks did not refer to his former letter; at least, they were not intended to, as I have known for a long time that he wasn't "unfortunate" enough to be living in a town. Indeed, I didn't know before that Mr. St. John wasn't a believer in dandelion. Just how he came to the conclusion that I was referring to him I cannot comprehend. Mr. St. John is very fortunate indeed in his choice of residence, if he is in a position to get a barrow-load of dandelion in any day of the year. A great deal may depend on the size of the barrow. In Lancashire, the dandelion is almost, if not altogether, deciduous; so we infer from his statement that the climatic conditions are very suitable to the herb in his district. Mr. St. John says "he cannot imagine any self-respecting person decrying an article of food simply because they haven't had the opportunity of using it themselves." If he hadn't always lived in the country his powers of imagination might have been better developed; and he might still live to know that all persons are not self-respecting, and that everyone is not possessed of so fancier-like a spirit as himself.

"TEMPUS OMNIA REVELAT."

WHERE DOES THE DANDELION SEED GROW?

SIR,—I write to answer the question by "Rochdale," in your last isue, viz., Does the dandelion seed grow on the same stem as the yellow flower? My answer is, that the seed does grow on the same stem. The flower develops and then withers or closes up again, to be followed by the rapid growth of the seed, which is easily distinguished by the white down, by which it is finally carried away like a miniature parachute, after the head has again opened out and seed ripened.

A YOUNG YORKSHIRE CANARY WITHOUT EYES.

SIR,—I am sending you a young Yorkshire Canary, sixteen days old, which I think is rather a freak. It not only has no eyes, but no eye sockets. It was much smaller than the others, so I transferred it to another nest, but it died when the other young ones could see. P. VICTOR-WILLIAMS.

[We have examined with interest the nestling sent by Mr. Williams. Though perfectly formed in every other respect, it entirely lacked (as above stated) eyes and eye sockets. It was very small for its age, and very backward in feathering.—EDITOR.

WAS IT A DASTARDLY ACT?

A Reward Offered.

SIR,—During a few days' absence from home in the Whit week, the door of my large Parrakeet aviary was left open by the person left in charge; or else someone kindly opened it for me, and either stole or liberated a very fine pair of Redrumps, a beautiful hen Rosella and a splendid breeding hen Cockatiel which was sitting on four eggs. (The cock must have been on eggs at the time, as he and a young one only are left). If anyone has caught any of the above birds I should be very pleased to hear from them, and to suitably reward them on returning the bird or birds to me. H. LEWIS.

THE BLACKCAP IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—This bird is a well-known summer visitor to us, arriving here in April and departing again in September. I have found that it generally comes back to its old haunts and builds sometimes in the same bush, or close to its former nest. It makes a nice cage bird and is also a good singer, besides being a fine show bird. Some, I know, differ very much as to whether it is better to have an old, fresh-caught bird taken in the spring on its arrival and before it is mated, or to take the young and hand-rear them. Some prefer to take the young just before they leave our shores. I have had them taken thus, but I certainly like to have the young and hand-rear them, because they are then steady and can be easily managed. A wild-caught and newly-arrived bird, however, takes time to steady down, and requires a lot of live-food before it will take to the food given him as a substitute. As a rule these birds only have one nest a year; no young can be expected before May or June. I have found them in both months. They build quite low down in a thick bush in gardens, in plantations, in ditches with small bushes growing there, and in pleasure grounds. They use various materials in building, and line the nest with horse-hair and sometimes with wool and down. The clutch of eggs is generally five, but I have known there to be six. The eggs vary very much in colour and markings. They are usually of light brown or pale orange with dark brown spots. When they have young the parents feed them chiefly on winged insects and caterpillars. After they leave the nest, being able to cater for themselves, and the fruit is ripe, they can generally be found in large gardens having their share of strawberries, raspberries and currants. Many a young one have I managed to get through its being caught in the "fish" netting which protects the fruit. I have also had Whitethroats and Nightingales caught in a like way; but that is some years ago now. These birds don't seem to be kept so much as of old. They seem to have gone out of fashion. I believe they were shown at the late Palace show with Nightingales. The bird is quite easy to keep. I have always found it so, and one I had I kept for a number of years, and it was a great pet. In the summer I used to keep him out of doors in a large box cage, giving him a good bath daily, as they are very partial to bathing. Anyone who can obtain a nest of young about 14 days old and hand-rear them, I am quite sure would be delighted. If anyone attempts to do so, let him try and get them as many small insects as possible—flies, small moths and butterflies, spiders, earwigs and he various aphides can be mixed with scalded bread and milk, and ants' eggs with mealworms cut up small may be given. These birds, like all insectivorous ones, require to be fed very early in the morning and at intervals of every two hours. It is surprising how quickly they grow if well attended to. The females are not of much use as cage birds, so when you can sex them it is advisable to let these have their liberty again. After they can feed themselves you can give them plenty of ripe fruit; both red and white currants they are very fond of. In winter they also like both the shop currants and raisins cut up into small pieces. Some of the currants can be soaked in cold water and some given as bought, as both are readily eaten by them. Roasted apple sweetened with either sugar, honey or golden syrup, together with grapes, etc., are greatly relished. Mine was very fond of grated cheese with its soft food and also custard. It will not be necessary to give a full decription of this bird, but it can be easily recognised by the beautiful black cap of the male bird, the female having a brown one. These birds and all insectivorous ones should always have a roomy cage of a box pattern. Some people put a piece of canvas cloth in the top of the cage to prevent the bird from injuring itself, but I have never done so, and I have always been able to steady my birds without much trouble, or injury to themselves. Once or twice I did tie the wings with a piece of thread, but that is over 20 years ago now, and I was not then so well enlightened in birdy matters as to-day. I can't say that that steadied them any quicker. I believe that a great many of these birds are caught with the limed twigs, but that method of catching birds I never have approved of. I have also caught them as well as other choice birds in years gone by, by the Sparrow nets round the shrubberies and hedges in August before they departed from here; this was, of course, before the Acts came out when birds could be taken at any time and anyhow. These few remarks may be of some service to anyone who can produce a nest of these birds and would like to hand-rear them. As a singer this bird has no equal, except the Nightingale, which is considered the better of the two. I don't, of course, include the Skylark with this class of birds. ORNIS.

YOUNG FEEDING THE YOUNG.

SIR,—As one who has found your valuable paper of great help I feel emboldened to state the following as an unusual instance of precocity on the part of young birds. Briefly the facts are these:—I had two birds sitting on five and four eggs respectively and due to hatch within four days of each other; in one case two eggs were productive and in the other only one bird was forthcoming. The parents of the two birds were very attentive and brought up their young, but the other pair did not take kindly to their one chick, only feeding it enough to just keep it alive. Then when it was two weeks and three days old the hen plucked it nearly bare. Consequently I placed it with the pair with the two other young birds, hoping they would take to it, which they did fairly well. But what surprised me most of all was to find one of the other young birds (only four days older) actually feeding it after being itself fed by its parents. It has continued to do this ever since, although it is still too young to feed itself. I have mentioned the facts to several fanciers in this city (Nottingham), who say they have never known such a case. I may also state that the little waif is thriving well. G. HAYWARD.

A Bird of Many Names.

Most birds rejoice in more than one name. In many cases one of them is simply used locally, but the Nightjar has four which are constantly in use, namely, the Fern Owl, Goat-Sucker, Erejar, and Nightjar. In addition to these he has one or two local names.

The Anatomy and Diseases of Birds.

By J. W. CUTMORE.

A Lecture delivered before the members and friends of the Liverpool Ornithological Society on May 19th.

A very interesting and instructive lecture was given by Mr. J. W. Cutmore (official taxidermist to the Liverpool Museum), on "The Anatomy and Diseases of Birds," to a largely-attended meeting of the members and friends of the Liverpool Ornithological Society on May 19th. Mr. Geo. B. Daniels ably occupied the chair. Mr. Cutmore's lecture was listened to with the closest attention, and an excellent discussion followed.

In a state of nature, said Mr. Cutmore, birds seldom suffer from sickness or disease, but in captivity they unfortunately suffer from all the popular diseases "enjoyed" by mankind, and the same numerous quack remedies have had their turn with them. The lecturer proceeded to give a brief description of the anatomy of birds (with the assistance of diagrams and preserved specimens), and then turned to a discussion of the causes of these numerous ailments.

"May Good Digestion Wait on Appetite."

Firstly, he said, a bird has a good appetite, which is looked upon as a proof of strength and energy, but an appetite alone without proportionate digestive powe, would be worse than useless. The apparatus of digestion must be first-rate. In birds the gullet is large; in the seed eaters it opens out into a great expansion called the crop (a storehouse). Food is not digested here, but passed into the stomach proper, the first part of which is the proventriculus, the soft foods being digested here, such as flesh foods; corn and seeds pass on to the gizzard, the walls of which in seed-eaters are very thick and strong. Stones are swallowed to assist in the work of crushing up the food before it can be properly digested. The food then passes into the first part of the small intestine (the duodenum), where it is acted upon by the juices of digestion from the liver and pancreas. This completes the work of digestion; the blood is now able to take up the food, which is carried to all parts of the body. The force pump behind this function of conveyance is the heart, and on its journey much of the blood passes through the kidneys, which assist the lungs to expel the waste from the body.

In man three organs divide between them this work—the skin, lungs, and kidneys; but in birds the skin is not an excretory organ, so the lungs alone have the duty of getting rid of superfluous water. The birds' breathing apparatus is of the first order. The organ of song is in the lower larynx (the syrinx) found in no other animal, at the division of the bronchi. The larynx proper has no vocal chords, as in mammals. The spleen is an organ of which there is no certainty as to its real function. It is considered to be an elaborator of the blood, building up the red corpuscles. The spleen is affected considerably in fevers, especially in septic fever.

Concerning the Egg.

The kidneys are a pair of three-lobed organs laying flat in the pelvis, of a dark red colour. They are very active in excreting urea and uric acid, which in birds is in a nearly solid form, seen by its whiteness in the excreta. On the upper lobes of the kidneys are situated the sexual organs, the ovaries of the female, and the testes of the male. The ova is fertilized as it passes into the oviduct (or fallopian tube), and it then passes down the tube (or duct) and becomes enveloped on the way with albumen (the white of an egg). On reaching the cloaca (broadly speaking, the lower part of the egg-passage), the shell is formed, the whole process taking from twelve to eighteen hours. The protozoa (or living germs) of the male are deposited in the oviduct, and fertilisation may take a fortnight, or twelve hours only, before the egg is laid.

Owing to the less specific gravity of that side of the yolk on which is the germinal disc, the embryo lies at the top of the egg nearest the body of the sitting hen. The hen moves her eggs daily to give those on the outer ring a change to the centre.

The albumen, or white of the egg, acts as a cushion (or buffer) for the yolk, which contains the embyro and its food. During the process of development the white gradually dries up.

What is Disease.

To turn to that part of our subject concerning bird diseases. Disease is a physiological process whereby certain organs have their functions increased, diminished, or accompanied by pain. It is a natural condition, being an attempt to accommodate the system to wrong conditions. For instance, the excess of food overtaxes the excretory organs, and hence arises disease of the liver, kidneys, and other organs. Whilst this excess of material is in the system its vitality is lowered, and when the balance is upset by a chill or draught, it does not recover easily, and disease is set up; whether it be inflammation of the lungs or bowels depends on the constitution of the bird. Had there been no waste in the system, recovery would have been rapid and the disease temporary.

Disease is not something foreign to the system, but natural functions perverted, and the ultimate aim is to regain health. Nature cures disease by banishing the appetite (or intake of food), then she gets rid of the waste in the system by purgation, vomiting, etc. The rational cure of disease is to lessen the intake, and to aid the system to get rid of waste by means of exercise, fresh air, baths, and natural treatment—not drugs, which lower vitality. Knowing that disease is due to wrong conditions, and that health can only come from right conditions, I want to know where drugs come in? And who can administer drugs successfully to a creature so small and delicately formed as a Canary? In the first place you cannot diagnose the disease with any degree of certainty. Doctors frequently fail to do so with patients of the genus homo, who are generally able to describe their symptoms.

A Difficult Disease.

In discussing the variety of diseases I will take the diseases of the respiratory organs first, because, without doubt, these are the most difficult to deal with, especially with Canaries. Where shall we find a birdkeeper who has not had a case of asthma in his room, and who does not know of the persistence with which asthmatic birds remain asthmatic? Bronchitis is often mistaken for asthma. The latter is generally caused by exposure to cold or wet after being kept in warm rooms, or to window draught, or hanging near ceilings heated with gas. You are all familiar with the "wheezing" that accompanies every breath. There seems to be no cure for this distressing complaint, in all these chest complaints fresh air being the only remedy.

It is painful to go into some bird rooms, because of the stuffiness. The cool air is rigorously excluded, windows are shut, and sand bags are used to keep out the air; doors are kept closed and made to exclude the air by means of listing; mats are even put at the door bottom to prevent it coming in that way. The ventilators, if any, are closed and the room in some cases is warmed by a stove, or lamp, which vitiates the air. Now, I say positively that coughs, colds, bronchitis, etc., in birds, as in mankind, are not produced by the cold air, but by the bad air breathed, for we find rooms heated as warm as they were in summer, and yet the inmates are always suffering from colds. On the other hand, we find those kept out of doors seldom having colds. The only remedy for colds in birds is to avoid the cause that gave rise to them, an ounce of prevention being better than a pound of cure.

Tuberculosis said to be Common.

Tuberculosis is fairly common among Canaries. This disease is incurable, and stock too much inbred seems peculiarly liable to tubercle. It is not advisable to use birds with this disease for breeding. If a valuable bird is afflicted, pair it only with a healthy bird, and keep them supplied with easily digested food, plenty of fresh air, and much room for exercise. Consumption can be kept in check by these health-giving conditions. When the lungs are affected the disease is called phthisis; the symptoms are gradual wasting, a husky cough, and slow moult. On examination after death small bodies of yellow matter like millet seed are found in the lungs. It is rife among the Ravens in the Liverpool aviaries. These birds are long-lived in their natural state, but they live in high altitudes, and are great flyers. In the aviaries they lack this purer air, also the vigorous exercise.

When I visited Davos, Switzerland, I took particular notice how consumptives were treated in this great sanitorium city, and I found it was fresh air day and night, and plenty of it, and no physic. It was wonderful to see how much exposure to cold and wind a dying consumptive could stand, and benefit by it. In Italy I found it interesting to see how much the people lived out of doors, the result being that consumption is little known there. It is called "the English disease." Some people imagine that night air is injurious, that it causes coughs, colds, consumption, and other evils. They never made a greater blunder. The inestimable importance of fresh air to young birds is not sufficiently known. It was found many years ago in the Rotunda Hospital, Dublin, that a great many children died a few days after birth (the same as young Canaries do). They could not understand this, and the deaths did not cease until the wards were properly ventilated. Young life requires plenty of pure air; not only air, but light also. Animals and birds in a state of nature bask in the sun and revel in its life-giving rays, whilst if we compare the mortality of the sunny and shady side of a street we find more deaths on the dark side. The Italians have a saying, "where the sun does not enter the doctor does."

Exercise and Errors of Diet.

Besides plenty of light and air, exercise is also essential for birds. It strengthens the muscles, increases the power of the heart, invigorates the body, makes the birds cheerful, causes warmth, burns up in the body waste material and excess of food, and is beneficial in every way. There is no doubt that many diseases of birds in captivity arise from errors in diet; for instance, much soft food is responsible for many deaths in Canaries. They are seed-eaters, therefore a seed diet is most suitable for them, except when rearing young ones.

There are many bird-breeders who deprecate the use of green food, some during the breeding season only, and others at all times. I think this a great mistake, and indicating a lack of observation of the habits of birds in their natural state. For instance, the Greenfinch and Linnet feed their young chiefly on green seedlings, young Hawfinches thrive splendidly on green peas, and others could be quoted. Speaking of diarrhœa, it is never caused by green food given fresh daily, but by decomposing green food, and other unnatural food, setting up undue loosenes by irritating the bowels. As a simple remedy for diarrhœa, I think you cannot get a better than the one mentioned in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, i.e., one drop of pure salad oil given in the beak to remove the offending matter from the bowels; next to see that the diet is correct, and stir together two drops of laudanum and as much prepared chalk as will lie on a shilling, and give it to the bird in its water when thirsty; then remove it for two hours; after this give it a stir round and replace.

There is another malady, typhoid fever, which affects the digestive organs and intestines. It is also termed enteric fever, on account of the ulcerations sometimes found in the intestines after death. Typhoid is less contagious than septic fever. It is caused by decomposing matter, polluted water, soiled food, etc., and diarrhœa is more marked in this complaint than in septic fever. Dr. Greene advised the use of water acidulated with dilute sulphuric acid, 30 drops to an ounce. If purging is severe one drop of laudanum can be added to the mixture, and blood in the excrement will guide as to its use. I would like to add to this prescription, that the best food to be given during these bowel troubles is bread and scalded milk sweetened, and a pinch of maw seed sprinkled over it to encourage the bird to eat it.

Returning to the subject of green food, I consider it most valuable as a preventive of constipation in seed-eating birds. Failing this a bit of ripe apple or soaked rape seed, remembering that their food in a wild state is in a semi-green condition; even in winter it is scarcely what we term dry, like the hard dry seeds we use (some of these are kiln dried), and constipation is frequently the result of this dry, hard, starchy seed diet, minus the green food.

In conclusion, I would like to bring before your attention a subject, the results of investigations which I carried out last summer. I had sent to me birds that had apparently to many people died of septic fever, or spleenic apoplexy. In each case I investigated the conditions and surroundings of the birds, and to my surprise I found in each case a perfectly sanitary state of things, in fact everything in the way of cleanliness was observed. I found upon inquiry that no importations had taken place either in the way of cages or birds. The owners were highly experienced breeders, and yet under these favoured conditions, a great number of birds died off in a very short time.

This caused me to think, and I discussed it with my veterinary and medical friends. The post-mortems showed identical features with anthrax in cattle. The only suggestion that came to my mind was, if this is anthrax, how could it reach these birds? Well, considering that each of these cases occurred in the summer (end of breeding season), was it not possible that the cow hair used for nesting material might have conveyed the germs? I leave it here, having no further evidence, but I would suggest that as a precaution the hair be placed into a hot oven before using. We may at some later date get further evidence to support my theory.

I think we are all agreed that birds are naturally healthy and subject to few diseases, that all ailments are due to wrong conditions in confinement, and that one must pay strict attention to these things—cleanliness, exercise, diet, and ample space for them to move about. There is no doubt that septic fever is caused, like many other maladies, by the neglect of sanitary precautions. Therefore I contend that it is wise and profitable to study the conditions that will ensure good health. I repeat, "one ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

"One at a Time, Please."

A barber friend of mine had a Parrot, which had escaped, and when attacked by some Crows, which were pecking at it, the Parrot exclaimed, "One at a time, please." The barber had been in the habit of saying these words, jokingly, when more than one of his customers rose to be attended to.—Sent by James Christie (age 14), 27, Collins Place, Stockbridge, Edinburgh.

A Grateful Robin.

Nine years ago a Robin was nearly frozen and fell from his perch on a tree into a garden. A gentleman picked him up and found one of his legs was broken. So he carefully set it, and at last Bobby could resume his flights through the air. Every day since then Bobby has shewn his gratitude by paying a visit to the house and garden. One day a stranger caught him and handled him roughly, so he will not pass the door or window, but he still comes daily to the garden to be fed with crumbs.—Sent by Dorothy Edmunds (age 13), 2, Arthur Street, Kings Lynn.

Bird Feeding a Cat.

At the Shropshire village of Asterley is to be seen the unusual sight of a bird feeding a cat. The bird is a Jay, and is owned by a Mr. Clarke. The bird's cage is fixed on the wall of the house over the water tub. Mr. Clarke's neighbour has frequently noticed her cat climb up the water-tub, and, as she thought, attempt to get the bird out of the cage. She used to frighten the cat off, until she noticed it taking some food away. The bird, when meat or other food is given to it, makes a peculiar noise which attracts the cat's attention. Pussy is then seen climbing up the cage, and the Jay picks up the food, and with its beak hands it to the cat outside. The cat has some kittens, which compel her to visit the bird very often.—Cut out and sent by Frank Pearcey (age 10), 73, High Street, Woodside, Dudley.

Observations on British Birds and their Keeping.

By W. LOWNE.

Being the discussion which followed a paper read before the L. and P.O.S. on May 21st.

There was a good gathering of members and friends of the London and Provincial O.S. on May 21, at headquarters, the "Raglan," Aldersgate Street, E.C., many very well-known British bird enthusiasts being included in the company. The attraction was a visit from that old and esteemed lover of our native birds, Mr. W. Lowne, of Yarmouth, who read an interesting paper, full of facts which evidenced long years of study and personal acquaintance with the subject. It was entitled, "Some rare insectivorous birds met with in Norfolk," and we shall hope to print the same in extenso in a future issue. A discussion followed, which added considerably to the enjoyment of the evening, Mr. Lowne giving those present many helpful "tips" from his store of knowledge concerning the keeping of birds in captivity. This discussion we give below. At the close a most hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Lowne, and the wish expressed that he would ere long pay London another visit. Mr. J. W. Ramsden ably and courteously officiated as chairman.

The Discussion.

MR. MORTLOCK said he would have been pleased to have heard the lecturer relate something of his experience in the keeping of the more common British Birds, and also (as they knew he was a past-master in the art) to have heard him tell how he managed to get his birds to that degree of perfection in which he had always shown them. Perhaps he would oblige with another paper in the future. (Laughter.) He would like to know how Mr. Lowne "meated off" his Softbills.

MR. LOWNE: Well, as regards my methods of meating birds off: I always obtain fresh caught birds when possible; I prefer these to hand-reared ones. I keep them in cages measuring 18 inches long, 16 inches high and 9 inches deep, of box pattern. In these I have an inner roof, as it were, with canvas stretched across it, so that if the birds jump up against the top of the cage they do not hurt their heads, and possibly kill themselves, which they are quite liable to do otherwise. I place a piece of glass along the front of the cage, on the inside of the wire, which prevents the birds knocking their feathers off should they bang against the front of the cage when first put in it, in their endeavours to get free. When they have become steady, of course, I remove this glass. Another good way (which I sometimes adopt) is to cover the cage-front with a piece of muslin, so that the birds cannot see you. Then for the first few days keep them in a light place, raising the muslin slightly each day, until by degrees you are able to remove it altogether. The birds thus become reconciled to the cages, and are not so afraid of you and your movements. Those birds that do not become steady after a reasonable time I generally give their liberty, as it is seldom such birds will ever become steady.

For the first period of captivity I give the birds plenty of live food, which I place in small, shallow glasses. This food consists chiefly of mealworms and well-scoured gentles, and when the birds see them moving about they generally take to them readily. It is only by degrees that I give soft-food, and this consists of dried ants' eggs and dried flies mixed with egg-food. I always, of course, give a supply of live-food as well.

Bearded Tits, as most of you I suppose are aware, are special favourites of mine, but my experience is that they are very liable to fits. A couple of years ago I lost one very fine specimen at the Palace Show, which had a fit just after it had been judged and awarded first prize. I had a Bearded Tit which I kept on the food I have mentioned for over four years in a cage 18 inches long. It was in the best of health, but then died suddenly. These birds (odd males) require to be kept separate, as they are very pugnacious, and to this end I have put them in a double cage partitioned off with glass; they snuggle down to roost side by side, the glass, of course, in between. It is quite as well, too, to let them see each other, if only for company's sake. I found that the birds huddled up close together in this double cage and seemed quite happy. It prevented them from getting at each others' tails, which they otherwise soon spoil. At least, that is my experience. Wheatears, Redstarts and such-like birds take about ten days to meat off. I give them a small glass with live-food in, by degrees getting them on to artificial foods. I have had fifteen Wheatears this spring, five or six Winchats, two cock Common Redstarts and two Chiff Chaffs, all of which have had gentles. I have been having a good many gentles sent to me regularly, and I am a great believer in them. I would advise all keepers of Wheatears and Redstarts to see the birds' feet are kept in a proper condition. The latter soon go wrong, and frequently they lose their toenails.

Asked by MR. HAWES if he kept the gentles in sand, the lecturer replied in the affirmative and added, in reply to another question as to where he found the flies in the cold weather necessary for the breeding of gentles, that a friend of his bred them. He had heard that this friend knew of pits on the Yorkshire moors into which dead horses were thrown. He (the lecturer) thought he could get quite as many gentles as he was likely to want, from this source.

MR. TRINGHAM asked whether or not the lecturer covered the perches of Wheatear's cages with felt or flannel, or whether he thought such covering would meet the difficulty in regard to the birds' feet?—Yes, it is a good plan to do this, but even then the birds are sometimes known to get sore feet. He found an equal mixture of sand and sawdust to be about the best thing possible for putting into the bottom of cages in which insectivorous birds were kept. Of course, the cages had to be cleaned out pretty frequently, or they would soon be found to smell. He was once asked, he said, if soft-billed bird could be "smelly." (Laughter.) To which he replied: "Smelly isn't the word." (Renewed laughter.)

MR. MORTLOCK asked if the lecturer recommended giving mealworms to Goldfinches and similar birds which were going to be used for Mule-breeding? Did he find them dangerous?—I find many Goldfinches are fond of mealworms and it does them good to have them. But it is for Hawfinches and Buntings that mealworms are the most used.—Mr. Mortlock then asked if Mr. Lowne thought it would be possible to breed with a cock Yellowhammer and a hen Greenfinch?—I should think it might be possible, but the chances are against it.—Respecting Miss Reeves' Bramblefinch-Chaffinch Hybrid (which was mentioned) Mr. Lowne said he understood this was a genuine specimen, and Messrs. Maxwell and Weston confirmed the statement, saying that they had seen the youngsters of this cross, some just as they were feeding themselves, and some just moulting their nest-feathers and coming into colour.

MR. HAWES: Have you run across any Crossbills?—Yes, they have been both seen and taken in Norfolk.

MR. RAMSDEN asked whether they had a close season in Norfolk, and the lecturer replied in the affirmative, adding suggestively that it was "very close" sometimes, and creating laughter by telling how some of the Norfolk "bobbies" occasionally became the possessors of birds.

MR. LOWNE said that he had hand-fed Grasshopper Warblers on ants' eggs—or cocoons, to give them their correct name. If, he added, you can keep Bearded Tits on dried ants' eggs and dried flies for four years, it was enough for any of the soft-billed birds. He had also kept Swallows on the same food, only in their case he added blackbeetles.

In reply to another question Mr. Lowne told how that the bird-catchers themselves did not always, by any means, know the names of all the birds they caught. As an instance he might tell them that a man came to him on one occasion and offered him a Yellowhammer. He (the lecturer) guessed it was a Yellow Wagtail and, sure enough, it was. (Laughter.) The people often confounded the names of these birds.

Mr. Lowne was then led into the relation of the circumstances attending a "lucky deal" he once had. His son came to him on one occasion when he was ill in bed and said there was a man downstairs who had a bird for sale; would he (the lecturer) like to buy it? He offered the man 3s. for it and ultimately got it. The bird resembled a Landrail, but was much darker in plumage, and turned out to be a very rare Rail, the first of its kind caught in Norfolk. He was at once offered a large sum for it, and eventually the bird changed hands at £20.

MR. RAMSDEN asked if the lecturer had ever tried chopped-up mealworms mixed with honey for birds which were ill? Mr. Lowne said he had not, and Mr. Ramsden explained that a gentleman once recommended to them the adoption of that course of treatment at the Crystal Palace, and they had always found it to be a really excellent plan.

How I Breed and Rear Linnet-Canary Mules.

By N. BOURNE.

To breed brown Linnet-Canary Mules may seem very easy to some, but in fact it is found by a good many to be very difficult. It is a fascinating hobby, and one that does not cost much money, and, therefore, specially suited to the working-man fancier. If the working man has a bird at all it more often than not is a brown Linnet.

Making One's Own Cages.

If, then, one wants to start Mule-breeding in a small way, he must have one or two single breeding cages. If he is short of this world's goods, the best thing is for him to get a box of suitable size and fit on to it a loose wire front of, say, 18 ins. long by 12 ins. wide, which is a good size. Or the fancier may make some cages. Let him buy some ½-in. yellow pine for the purpose. A handy size, and one which will take the front I mentioned above, is 11 ins. from front to back, 16 ins. high and 19 ins. long. Allow ¾ of an inch for the turnrail (for cleaning out) and have a strip nailed fast in the front 1½ ins. wide on the top of turnrail or slide. This will leave ¾ of an inch space above the wire front so as to allow of its being lifted up for the purpose of being taken out.

Get your wood in the house, if you can, a short time before you want to use it, so that it will not warp after the cage is made. In making the cage fit it well together so as not to provide harbours for the red mite. If you have a knowledge of soldering you can make your own fronts; but if you have to buy them see that you have the best quality you can get; it will pay you in the end.

The next thing the fancier will want is the hen or hens. If you can afford it get Norwich hens, yellow or buff, but yellow in preference. You can get these from 3s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. each, according to your taste and the contents of your pocket. If that is too much get as large a hen as you can, one which they call a "common" Canary, which is generally a cross between a Norwich and a Roller; or, better still, get a cross between a Norwich and a Yorkshire.

These hens can generally be got at from 2s. to 3s. each. But whatever hen you decide upon having, be sure it is a young one and also healthy. If your hens are not healthy, neither will your Mules be healthy, and they will very likely die during the moult, which is a very trying time for them.

If you see a hen flying about the cage flapping her wings she is all right; but if she is sitting still and puffed out like a round ball, have nothing to do with her. You can generally tell a young hen by the absence of scales on the legs; and she has very short, fine nails compared with those of an old one. The beak, also, must not for a young bird be overgrown.

Some Final Preparations.

When you have got your hen or hens put them in the breeding cage in about February within sound of your cock Linnet. Personally, I prefer a house-moulted Linnet to breed with if I can get one. But if this is not possible, you should get one a few months before you want to use it so as to get it quite tame. The principal thing is to keep your Linnet in good health and gradually bring him into breeding condition by the use of dandelion flowers, giving him two or three each day, that is, of course, as soon as you can gather them in the fields.

See that the water glasses, or pitcher fountains, whichever are used, are kept very clean; it is of no use putting clean water in dirty fountains. Use a small paint-brush and hot water to get the slime out of the corners. Give clean water twice a day, if possible. Also be careful to look after the hen Canary in a similar manner with regard to water and fountains.

A mixture of German rape and Canary seed will do very well for the hen Canaries, or Canary seed may be given alone, a little German rape being given by itself two or three times a week. The hens will come into condition all right, but a teaspoonful of egg-food per bird may be given each day a short time before pairing up. This will help them on very well, along with the other treatment.

How to Make Egg-food.

To make egg-food, boil a new-laid egg for 15 minutes, and when it is cold take off the shell and force the egg through a piece of perforated zinc. Then crush four arrowroot biscuits (thin ones) and rub this and the egg well together. This makes good egg-food, and the use of the white of the egg as well makes the food nice and moist. It will keep good for two days in a cool place. If you use only the yolk of the egg with the biscuit, it will keep longer, but it will want moistening with water before it can be given to the birds. Mix just enough of the food for each occasion, stirring it up with a fork and making it crumbly moist. Clean out the zinc and the utensils which you put the egg-food into every day, as the food soon gets sour. I prefer using the white as well as the yolk along with the biscuit, as the birds seem to like it much better.

A good mixture for Linnets is Canary seed and German rape in about equal parts, with a little English rape and niger seed all mixed well together. Be sure and keep the Linnet's cage free from red mite, as this will set him back in condition quicker than anything else. If you see any white specs about the cage, it is a sign of red-mite. Use a little turpentine on a brush and it will be found they do not like it, and it will at least stop them from increasing. If you have a spare cage so much the better; run your Linnet into the spare cage and give the dirty one a good cleaning, letting it stand for a week or two before putting the Linnet back again into it.

If the Linnet is looked after properly he should be in full breeding condition by the first week in April, especially if he is a house-moulted bird, but house-moulted Linnets are expensive and hard to be got. As a rule the lowest prices are from 2s. 6d. to 7s. 6d., while a fresh-caught Linnet can be got for as low as 8d.

On Pairing-up.

When your Linnet is in full breeding condition his beak will be of a blue-black colour; he will also be in full song, and if you hear him doing a prolonged note before he bursts into song, it will be what they call "creeping." Also, if he squeaks you will know he is in a forward condition. If you see him "feeding" his foot or a wire in the cage you will know he is coming into condition. Do not pair them up until your Linnet is in full breeding condition; if it is a little later than you hoped it would be, you should still have time to get two nests from them.

If your hen Canary is ready in the first week in April and also your Linnet, pair them up. Put a nest pan in the cage and hang a penny nest-bag on the wires. The Canary will very likely be stupid for a little while. Canaries will not pair to Linnets as quickly as they do to Canaries, especially if the Canaries are kept in the same room as the Linnets. But if you see the cock Linnet feeding the hen, then you can hope for something farther. Some Linnets will pull the nest out as fast as the hen puts it in, but never mind; the hen will nearly always have a little material in the nest pan when she lays.

Observations on British Birds (concluded).

In reply to MR. MORTLOCK, the lecturer stated that he had found Black Redstarts invariably easier to keep than the Common Redstarts. It was strange that the one variety should be so wild and the other so comparatively tame, but it was so.

In reply to MR. LUGG the lecturer stated that though many people condemned the use of castor oil, and said that it killed more birds than it saved, he was not above using it in the case of birds which developed fits. He had, in fact, found nothing better. He gave a drop (warmed), he said, direct into the bird's beak, repeating the dose after a short interval, if necessary.—Relative to the question as to the best method of effectually dropping medicine down a bird's throat, Mr. Ramsden said that if one used a lady's ordinary hairpin with which to open the beak, using for that purpose, of course, the rounded end, it would be found that the beak could be kept open quite easily, and the oil, or whatever it was one wished the bird to swallow, would be taken quite well.

This page will consist of topical hints, addressed chiefly to beginners, concerning every branch of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the notes will be contributed from time to time by various leading experts.

The waste seeds from a threshing machine can also be utilised. These are of much larger-sized grains and more useful. But here again the gardener has to think twice before meddling with them. The writer still has a lively remembrance of an experiment in this line which took place many years ago in his own garden. The thresher had been at work hard by, and the mater, doubtless as ignorant of its probable result, as he in his young innocence had permitted a heap of the waste to be brought in for the poultry. But there was a lively time to get it cleared away when the maturer knowledge of the pater was brought to bear on the subject. The whole of the remaining seed, all at any rate that could be discovered, was almost religiously scraped up and burnt; the surface soil also was cut off and burnt where the seed had been scattered.

But alas! the following spring proved all too clearly that the precautions had not been quite successful, and it was many a long year before the last pretty flower of the farmers' fell enemy—charlock—disappeared from that garden. No! so long as fanciers love their gardens they will have none of such machine-waste brought near it.

Caraway.

Why this seed and aniseed should have become recognised as bird seeds is somewhat of a mystery. Probably there are exceedingly few expert breeders or bird-keepers that ever dream of giving them a place in their larder, yet they are used in greater or less proportion in quite a number of the mixed packet seeds on the market. They are both more of the nature of flavouring spices than foods, for which reason they may possibly be added to mixtures as a kind of relief for the birds—a very futile object.

Caraway needs no other description than that it is the small, thin, slightly-curved seed, with the surface corrugated longitudinally, and of a brown colour, which is used in cakes—"seed-cakes"—and other confectionery. So far as the observations of practical users have gone, this seed is systematically rejected by Canaries and seed-eaters generally. Therefore, the proportion of caraway in any mixture represents just as much waste.

Aniseed.

As with the last-named, this is a flavouring spice rather than a food. In shape it is somewhat like a miniature cone, but only a trifle larger than rape seed and usually ends with a short bristle which probably formed the stalk of a stamen in the flower. In colour, it is of a greyish brown, and when the seed is bruised it emits a strong aromatic, pleasing odour, similar to the oil or essence of aniseed. It forms a small proportion of some fancy mixtures, but is not so freely employed as the caraway. If the seed supply runs short, Canaries will pick up and nibble this seed just as they will any other waste matter within reach, but when the usual supply of seed is available, it is more than likely that aniseed is ignored.

It may, perhaps, be nibbled at times for the sweetish flavour which is got from it, and it may possibly be of some slight advantage as a pectoral when birds have colds. Still, when the latter kind of assistance is required, it can be given more economically and far more efficiently by adding a drop or two of the liquid essence of aniseed to the water.

One Great Drawback.

But even if the birds were fond of aniseed there is always one serious drawback to its use. The strength of its pleasant odour when the seed is bruised. The scent has a great attraction for rats and mice, so much so that the essence is often used to make the bait of traps more attractive. To habitually have the seed about must, therefore, be a kind of standing invitation to all the rodentia in the immediate neighbourhood to come to the feast, and afford the fancier the not very highly desirable opportunity of personally putting some virus to a practical test. At any rate, plain seeds are quite attractive enough to these vermin without adding to them spicy condiments which are of little practical value, if any, to the birds themselves.

Starting an Outdoor Aviary.

The raw recruit in the great army of aviculturists will find the present an excellent time for stocking an outdoor aviary with birds of any and every kind he desires to keep. Just now is far and away the best time in all the year to commence stocking with foreign birds. Even the supposed delicate species will in many instances scarcely feel the transference from inside at this time if they have been properly treated for a few weeks in the later part of the spring.

The proper treatment for the birds which it is intended to turn out, is to prepare them for the final change by steady and easy stages. First, by cutting down the heat at which the room was kept as the spring advanced until it vanished altogether; then by gradually getting them accustomed to open windows at every favourable turn of the weather, until at this time, when the temperature is mild and more generally reliable, they are able to exist with windows open wide all day long and well into the night.

When this is the case, the change to an open-air existence in which there is usually plenty of room for vigorous exercise is scarcely felt, and the birds once accustomed to the change will, provided they have a covered shelter to retire to at night or during bad weather, rapidly become hardier, and will in very many cases go through the winter without showing the least discomfort from the cold.

Of course, if one's object is to keep the aviary permanently stocked outside, the birds should not be removed at the approach of winter. On the contrary, make the covered shelter snug and comfortable as far as possible without employing any artificial means of heating it, and then simply keep an eye on the birds as the winter approaches to see if and when they begin to show signs of suffering from the cold.

Should this occur, then the birds so affected should be transferred to a cool room indoors until the following spring, when they may be turned out a month or more earlier than was the case in the previous year, and will probably complete their acclimatisation that year. There are, however, some individuals which will never become quite hardy, and have to be taken indoors for a few months every year. It is individuals rather than species that are thus affected, and ago very probably has something to do with it.

When They Feel the Cold.

The novice may, perhaps, doubt his abilities to tell whether the birds are feeling the cold or not. It would be a false alarm that gave him this anxiety. The birds are such real creatures of the hour that there is very little doubt of their feelings being made apparent to even the least attentive observer. There is no hypocrisy or make-believe about them.

When they really begin to feel the cold, their sprightliness soon frizzles out, and their tightly-tucked up feathers and prim and neat carriage soon vanish, and you have a loose, puffy creature huddling up to some fellow-sufferer and when it does move, which is, in bad cases, only to make a flying visit to the food vessel, going about with a miserable, woe-begone appearance, that is all too eloquent of their sore straits.

There need be no doubt about discovering the susceptible specimens by their evident dislike of the weather before any serious harm is done, and removing them indoors for the time being. It does not require any exceptional acumen to detect the "susceptibles."

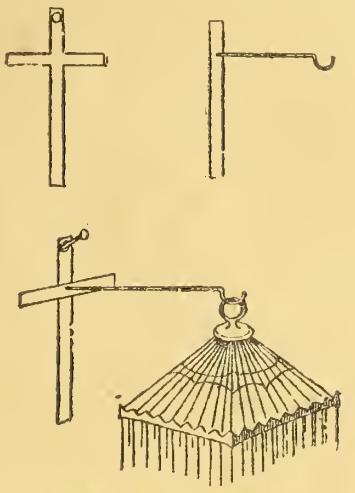
A HANGER FOR ALL-WIRE CAGES.

Sent by E. Simmons.

I was much interested in the drawing and description which recently appeared of the method for hanging cages against a wall—a capital plan for wooden-backed cages. I am now sending you a design for hanging up the ordinary all-wire cages. Out of a piece of brass ¼in. thick, a "cross" must be cut 14ins.



Hanger for Wire Cages.

long and ¼in. wide, and a hole the size of a sixpence be made at the top. The cross-piece (see sketch) is 10ins. long, and comes 2ins. from the top. From this cross, at right angles, another piece of brass, of equal thickness and width, and formed into a hook at one end, must be fixed (see Fig. 2). This simple arrangement can be hung on to a strong nail anywhere. I generally put it near to a window so that the bird can have plenty of light. The cage being on the swing, prevents a cat springing upon it. This hook will be found very useful where there is no curtain pole or other means of suspending the cage by a cord and S hook in the ordinary way.—E. Simmons.

Sent by A. G. Coombs, New Pits, Paulton, near Bristol.

In my sketches of this article for hand-feeding purposes. Fig. 1 represents a whole goose feather (or quill); Fig. 2, quill with point cut off, and stuck in position; Fig 3, when food has been discharged. I find this article very useful for hand-feeding young Canaries with. First procure a goose feather, and cut the point off. Then from about 2ins. up make an oblong cut (downwards) about three-quarters of an inch long. It can be made with a small pen-knife, or heated knitting needle. Then fit in a small round stick, to run easily, as seen in diagram. Then thrust another small stick cross-wise through quill, after making a small hole in the stick already in the quill, to receive the cross one. The "feeder" is now ready for working by filling the bottom with egg-food. It can be gently worked when the young have their mouths open. In sketch 3 it is seen when food has been discharged.—A. G. Coombs.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

June Jottings.

June is the "leafy month," and the luxurianco of growth of all vegetation is this year phenomenal. Along the tangled hedgerows, where the wild roses are now in full bloom, the blackberry brambles, green and sappy, with robust health, are struggling for light and air among the masses of tall grass and nettles; the sweet-scented honeysuckle and wild clematis are rambling in graceful profusion over the hedge-top; so thick and dense is it all that bird-nesting is now a most difficult matter, and it is only by the anxious note of the Greenbird and scolding cry of the Warblers that any idea of the vicinity of a nest can be had. And yet on every hand there are signs and sounds of the abundance of wild-bird life. The squeaking cry of young Thrushes is heard in every bush, and immature Blackbirds flutter across the roadway. If we rest for a time upon the bank or under a shady tree we see the busy Whitethroats peering among the undergrowth, carrying on their endless task of collection for the downy brood. One can hardly imagine what the country would be like without these busy destroyers of insect life. Watch carefully the Warblers, for a few hours, upon some sunny morning; they are, generally speaking, fairly tame and confiding, so that even with the naked eye one can plainly discern what they are doing. In most cases green caterpillars appear to be the chief food they carry to the nest. Hopping from branch to branch or flitting from bush to bush, they work their way to the vicinity of the young, collecting the brilliant green destroyors of vegetable life as they go, until their tiny beaks can hold no more. This work continues day after day, from sunrise to sunset, with only slight relaxation in the hottest part of the day; yet in spite of such labour there is always an abundance. Without the birds, a ramble in the fields would in a few years be an impossibility, but busy as the Warblers are, they must not be credited with all the useful work of the bird world. All the soft-bills, and the Finches, too, are just as diligent in their attentions to insect life. A pair of Greater Tits have a hungry brood in a tree by the roadside; this brood probably consists of six or eight young ones, for large families are common with these birds, and half-a-dozen would be quite an average lot. Fifty yards away is an empty house with a few bushes growing in the neglected front garden. These are infested with hairy caterpillars, fairly large ones—about four placed end to end would be as long as the bird. Time after time, and at the rate of about one a minute, did one of the old birds journey from the garden to the tree. There was no shyness, and no idea of concealment; it was quite a straightforward, busy affair. It is curious to note that had this bird been in the woods instead of along the roadside, he would probably have done all he possibly could to have led us astray. It was a case of "familiarity breeds contempt."

Pole Traps.

The infamous pole trap is said to be used to this hour in the woods around Ilfracombe, and no effort to arouse a sense of its cruelty seems to help.

A Disputed Point.

The nesting of the Starling affords a disputed point in ornithology. Some contend that he is single-brooded, others are equally certain that he rears more than one family.

A Birdy Contrast.

The baby cry of the young Skylark by its silvery tone, gives evidence of its future excellence of song, while the discordant screech of the fledgling Blackbird has no resemblance to the liquid melody of its parent.

By the Meadow Stream.

Happy birds build everywhere—high in the trees, low on the ground, and where the brambles mingle with the grasses, the fledglings flutter among the growth, lost to view, in their flowery surroundings. Blackbirds and Thrushes build in the hawthorns overhanging the stream. Down among the nettles and knotted grasses, a Warbler hides her treasures, far enough in the hedge to escape the sharp knife when the grass is mown. The Wood Pigeons build in the taller trees, and a pair of Turtle Doves have chosen a twisted branch of the taller hawthorn to deposit a few sticks and root stems, which form her nest. Every nook and likely place has been taken possession of. The field is down for hay, and the birds are safe while the grass is standing.

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping.

That Volume is

and this year it is admitted on all hands, by keepers of all kinds of birds, to have made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

COLOURED PLATE.

An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramblefinch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

CALENDAR.

A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"WORK OF THE YEAR."

A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"WASHING AND PREPARING BIRDS FOR EXHIBITION."

Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"THE BREEDING AND REARING OF CANARIES."

A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many excellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"PAIRS MATCHED FOR BREEDING."

A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"THE BREEDING OF HYBRIDS."

An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"THE KEEPING OF BRITISH BIRDS."

A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"SOME EASILY OBTAINABLE FOREIGN BIRDS."

An account of some pretty and hardy species, with information on their caging and feeding.

"REVIEW OF THE EXHIBITION YEAR."

Every breed of Canary, together with Hybrids, British and Foreign birds, has its progress on the show-bench during 1907 dealt with by leading judges, specialists, and experts, and the names of the principal winning exhibitors are given.

"THE DISEASES OF CAGE-BIRDS."

A feature in itself worth the whole cost of the volume. Diseases and accidents are described, and the best medicines and methods of treatment stated in simple language, and very fully and completely. It will save you many valuable birds.

"GLOSSARY OF TERMS."

The curious terms used by fanciers are fully explained. Reference to the alphabetically-arranged columns will at once tell you the meaning of such expressions as jonque, leafy feather, mooning, rowing, and the like.

In addition to these features will be found a

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

"EGGERTINE"

Is the best, purest and greatest bone and muscle forming food ever known, as the analytical reports of most eminent authorities prove. It is a genuine egg food made with fresh laid English eggs, with white, of course, included (and NOT foreign preserved yolk of egg), with other valuable properties combined. Tins, post free 1s. 3d.; large size 2s. 6d. There is a saving in the larger size.

It is the best proved food to bring hens into laying condition, and give strength and nourishment.

Remember, you know at least who you are dealing with, as I do not advertise myself as a female, I cannot stoop to that for the purpose of catching the "Innocents." To be "mere man" and act as such has always been good enough for me.

DERWENT VALLEY C.B.S.

Meeting held June 20, in the Store Hall, Low Westwood, Mr. W. Marsh in the chair. There was a good turn-up of members. We had on view the cups and medals, prize cards, etc., for the First Feather Show. There are about five medals to compete for. I take this opportunity of reminding members that subscriptions are due and must be paid up before they can exhibit at the Show. Intending members can join by paying the annual subscription.—JOSEPH BROWN.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Usual fortnightly meeting held on June 20th, the chairman, Mr. John Farrar, presiding over a large number of members. The meeting proceeded with the election of the other judge for our open show on November 20th and 21st, and it was decided to engage Mr. A. G. Cameron (Kelso) to act in conjunction with Mr. J. H. Roe. Several matters of minor importance having been dealt with, and passed, the meeting was thrown open for questions. A chance remark by one of the members led to the subject of taxidermy, and at the request of several of the members Mr. John Riseborough discoursed on the subject. He explained the method of procedure from beginning to end, giving in detail the best method of cutting the bird, paring the skin from the body, curing, stuffing, and finally mounting. He laid great emphasis on the necessity for stuffing the bird to its correct shape, and mounting it in its right position, stating that it was in these two particulars that most of the amateur taxermidists failed, for they seemed to think that all birds, especially Canaries, were of the same shape and position. The members accorded Mr. Riseborough a hearty vote of thanks for his very interesting and instructive address. Two new members (Messrs. Tallantine and Farren) were admitted into the Society. Fanciers are invited to attend our meetings.—REID AND MADDISON, Secretaries.

CLUB REPORTS.

CROOK ORIGINAL C.B., R. & P.S.

At our last monthly meeting the stewards were elected for our annual open first feather and young stock show under C.B.U. Rules, to be held on July 25th. These are: Messrs. R. Wilkinson, W. Brawn, J. Dobinson, and H. Dixon. The following are the classes: Nor., 2; Yorks, Crests, or Crest-bred, Mules or Hybrids, Brit., 2, Linnet, 1; Novice open; 10s. Selling Class. Mr. T. Hill (Thornaby-on-Tees) will judge. The committee have added a fourth prize for this show, and hope fanciers will again rally round, and send in a bumping entry. Entries close on July 21st. Schedules are now ready, and may be had from me.—A. BOWES, Sec., Wilson-street, Crook.

CINNAMON MARKED Y.C.C.

A committee meeting was held on June 20th, at the Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. Gledhill (President) in the chair. It was decided that we ask for trade and other advertisements to be printed in our year book, and it was hoped that breeders especially would take advantage of this way of helping the Club and themselves. The principal business was the fixing of value of the competition specials, and they were passed as follows:—Open competition, first prize, tea urn (value £4 4s.); second, tea service (value £2 10s. 6d.); third, cup, presented by Mr. J. Sandiford, of Preston (value £2 2s.); and fourth, cash, 10s. 6d. Mr. H. H. Towers and Messrs. Odgen Bros. gave 10s. 6d. each towards these specials. Mr. J. W. Ramsden, the colour-food vendor, will give silver-plated cruet for most points won by bird moulted on his peppers. Members should note this. He also gives a similar cruet to the novices' competitions. Novice competition: First prize, rose bowl (value £2 10s.); second prize, gold medal (value £1 1s.); third, medal, presented by Messrs. R. Sutcliff and Son (value 10s. 6d.); and fourth prize, medal (value 7s. 6d.), given by Mr. J. W. Wharton. There is also a competition for three special prizes given by Mr. Carl, to be called CAGE BIRDS special prizes, of the value of, 1st, 25s.; 2nd, 20s.; and 3rd, 15s., for those members who have not won more than three first prizes in open competitions. All these specials are for members only, and as the annual subscription is only 1s. 6d., it is hoped all Yorkshire Fanciers will join our club. We have made great progress, but the committee are desirous of going still further. The following gentlemen either gave or promised cash towards the special prize fund: Messrs. Bentley, 7s. 6d.; J. Greaves, W. Crabtree, H. Simmonett, J. Wilcox, W. Richmond, and W. Gledhill 5s. each; A. Cooper, A. Blakey and A. Hirst, 2s. 6d. each. The committee hope this list will be added to before the end of the year. Our next meeting will be held on July 25th, at the Market Tavern, Bradford, when all applications must be to hand. Any Society wishing the patronage of the club must make at least four classes for marked Yorkshires (Cinnamon), two cocks and two hens; and if they will also make two ticked classes, the club will bear half the loss on ticked classes, if any. They must also state date of show and name of judge for these classes. The usual 2s. 6d. for best four prizes in cocks and hens and novice 5s. will be given.—R. GARNETT, Secretary, 17, Woodville-terrace, Windhill, Shipley.

NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

Presentation to Mr. J. W. Rennie.

General meeting held June 17th, when there was a splendid attendance, Mr. J. W. Rennie in the chair. Prize-money was paid for young stock show. The chairman then called upon Mr. A. B. Forse to give his promised cage-making demonstration. In the course of this it soon became apparent to all that Mr. Forse was a past-master at the business, and everything was thoroughly explained to the general satisfaction of those present. Many questions were asked and suitably answered. After a hearty vote of thanks had been accorded to Mr. Forse, the secretary (Mr. R. P. Harper) announced that the next item was a presentation to the worthy chairman, Mr. J. W. Rennie, who was officiating on that evening for the last time, owing to business taking him from London. The secretary stated that to his sorrow and regret he had been obliged to place Mr. Rennie's resignation before the committee, who very reluctantly accepted same, but they felt they would like to show their appreciation of his valuable help in some way. He had, therefore, notified all the members, and felt very pleased at the splendid response. Mr. Harper continued: In my position as secretary, I have been brought into closer contact with Mr. Rennie than most of you, and can assure one and all that the welfare of this association was his first thought, while he has rendered yeoman service. I am pleased to say that he is taking with him his valuable stock of Canaries, so we can rely on his usual entry at the annual show. His absence will be felt very keenly, as he has earned the highest respect and esteem of every member. I ask you, Mr. Rennie, to accept this set of gold links and studs and testimonial as a small token of our esteem, friendship, and regard, and we sincerely trust your new venture will prove successful in every respect, and that you may long be spared to enjoy good health and prosperity. (Loud applause.)—Mr. R. L. Crisp supported the presentation, and said he thoroughly endorsed the secretary's statements. Not only was Mr. Rennie a true sportsman, but he would go further and say that he was the most unselfish fancier he (Mr. Crisp) had ever the good fortune to meet, and he was sure wherever he went he could not help but be popular. We all know how well this association has flourished during his connection with us. I must compliment our secretary on choosing such an appropriate present, and expect his thoughts, when purchasing the set of links, was to link Mr. Rennie to us for all time. (Loud applause.) On Mr. Crisp resuming his seat, Mr. Marley rose to express his appreciation of Mr. Rennie, and said the splendid response proved how well he was respected by the members, especially seeing that it was all carried through in less than a week.—At the request of the meeting the secretary read out the testimonial, which was signed by about 40 members, and was as follows:—"To J. W. Rennie, Esq.: Before you leave us for your new sphere of labour, we, the undersigned, desire to express to you our deep sense of gratitude for all you have done for the Association during the two years in which you have acted as its chairman. Under your chairmanship it has flourished greatly, and we need not say how much your absence will be felt. We ask you to accept this small token of our esteem, friendship, and regard, and express the hope that you may long be spared to enjoy health and prosperity in the days to come."—Mr. Rennie, on rising to respond, was greeted with loud and prolonged cheers, and when at last he was able to speak, said: Gentlemen, I hardly know how to thank you for such a handsome present, and cannot make out what I have done to deserve it. Your kind remarks have affected me very much. I shall always remember with pride the many pleasant hours I have spent amongst you. As you know, I am removing shortly to the Junction Hotel, Andover, and shall always be pleased to see any of you there. I am looking forward to being with you again at the annual show in October, and if you will allow me I shall be pleased to offer you a two-guinea special for competition at that show, to be allotted as your committee think fit. (Applause.) I trust you will extend the same courtesy and support to your new chairman, Mr. F. Williamson, as you have always accorded to me, and I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the handsome testimonial handed to me by our secretary on your behalf. (Applause.)—The election of new officers, viz., Chairman, Mr. F. W. Williamson; Vice-Chairman, Mr. A. J. Marley; Committee, Mr. J. Bell concluded a very pleasant evening.—R. P. Harper, Hon. Sec.

BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1908 SEASON.

Secretaries and Fanciers are invited to send their experiences

I am having a very successful breeding season. I have about 30 young Norwich Plainheads, 16 of which are on the sticks. I also have several nests of good eggs which are due to hatch shortly. I have heard of a number of fanciers round here who are doing fairly well —T. CRAIGHILL (Manchester).

Yorkshire C.C. of Scotland.

The members are not having the best of luck, unfertile eggs and dead young birds in shell being the chief causes. Several members have had no young yet. I have only saved three from nine nests. Of the few that have met with success, Mr. Fortune had 21, Mr. Penman 18, Mr. Hendry 7, from one pair; these have done splendidly, and also Mr. Cardwell. Messrs. M. Dougall, Lowe, and Jamieson have several each.—F. BOWMAN, Hon. Sec.

Forfar and District C.B.S.

The breeding season has not been a very good one here owing to the bad weather we had to commence with, the first round being very bad. But better results have been reported with the second round. Norwich Canaries have been the worst, but breeders are doing better now. It is said that a few good ones are to be seen in the various bird-rooms. The Border Fancies have done far better, one member having over 50 young and three others over 30 each. Things give promise of being very warm in this section. Mules are not a large "crop," but some Goldie and Linnet-Canary Mules are to be seen. I have seen some laying records reported in CAGE BIRDS, but I think this will take some beating. One of our members has a Norwich hen that laid 11 eggs. He has set her on 7, putting the other 4 under another hen. I hope to report better results by the end of the season.—W. GREWAR, hon. sec. of the Forfar and Dis. C.B.I.S.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding proceduro, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE SHOWS.

HARTLEPOOLS C.B.S.

A table show of Yorkshire Canaries (nest feather) was held in the Y.M.C.A. on June 17th, when four classes were provided, and a fair entry was obtained. Mr. Ben Evans judged, and his awards were well received.

CL. YELL.: 1, 2, Woodhead; 3, Williams. BUFF: 1, 2, Williams. TRD., ETC., YELL.: 1, Williams; 2, Woodhead. BUFF: 1, 3, Woodhead; 2, Williams. After judging a very interesting discussion took place, and all agreed that the quality and style of the birds were excellent. The birds ought to be heard of again. A hearty vote of thanks to the judge closed a very enjoyable meeting.—WILLIAMS and EASBY, Hon. Secs.

WIBSEY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The first young feather show was held on June 13th. Mr. J. Hartley (Lidget Green) placed the cards, and gave full satisfaction. Thirty-seven birds were staged in four classes, and though not quite up to the usual quantity, the quality of the exhibits was of the very best, and special mention should be made of the first two birds in the ticked and uneven marked yellows, both of which were typical Yorkshires of good size. The first bird in the ticked and uneven Buff class was also a grand all-round bird, of which the owners ought to be proud. The owner of the second in ticked yellows and first in ticked Buff has not exhibited a bird before, and is one of the novices.

CL. YELL. YORKS.: 1, 2, Bastow; 3, Chapman and Bateman; 4, Ellerton; vhc, Crowther; hc, Humpries; c, Lawson. BUFF: 1, Lawson; 2, Crowther; 3, Musson; 4, hc, c, Chapman and Bateman; vhc, Benn. TICK., ETC., YELL.: 1, 3, Chapman and Bateman; 2, Hudson; 4, Hindle; vhc, c, Crowther; hc, Thornton. BUFF: 1, Hudson; 2, Ellerton; 3, Beaumont; 4, Bastow; vhc, Crowther; hc, Norton; c, Wright.—E. W. JOHNSON, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

The second table show for birds in nest feather was held at Lockhart's Cafe, 65, Grainger-street, Newcastle, on June 17, when there were some nice birds present. Again the principal prizes went to Blaydon, Mr. Davison taking first in each class with two taking exhibits. They were not so large as some there, but were good in position and feather—two things which go so far to make an exhibition Yorkshire. On this occasion we amalgamated with the Northern B.B. and M.C., and there was quite a gathering of Fanciers in Lockhart's basement. It is very pleasant to meet Fanciers of other varieties of birds, and to interchange ideas with them. The Britishers have it on some points, as, for instance, when friend Bertram takes us up and points out the second, third, and fourth winners, and says "What do you think of them for 3s. 9d. worth?" We had to admit that Britishers were cheaper than Yorkshires were. The secretary judged.

CL. YELL. OR BUFF: 1, Davison; 2, Grieve; 3, Slack; vhc, hc, Ellwood; c, Mather. TICK., ETC., 1, Davison; 2, Ellwood; 3, Grieve; vhc, Davison. The next show is on July 8th, when Mr. Slack judges.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Hon. Sec.

TORBAY O.S.

A members' first feather show (Canaries) was held on June 17th in the public hall, Paignton, when the exhibits in the Norwich class especially were very good, both in number and quality. The exhibition was a creditable one throughout. Mr. J. B. Dyer (Torquay) judged.

NOR., CL. YELL.: 1, Daw, very neat and cobby; 2, Jeffery, very promising. BUFF: 1, Jeffery, lovely quality, good wings and tail; 2, Bastard, grand, fine-headed bird; 3, Daw, beautiful shape; vhc, Mugford; hc, Collings. TKD., ETC., YELL.: 1, Daw, very promising wing-mkd. bird; 2, Jeffery, eye tick; 3, Collings, lacks size, but good in feather; vhc, hc, Hodge. BUFF: 1, Jeffery, hen of good size, good head and neck, nicely marked in tail; 2, 3, Daw, 2nd also hen, heavily varicgated; 3rd, thigh-ticked cock, very shapely; vhc, hc, c, Webber; hc, Mugford; c, Collings. YORKS., CL. YELL.: 1, 2, Hodge, 1st well trained, easy winner; 2nd, very stylish hen; 3, Mugford, very young, but full of quality; vhc, Bastard; hc, Parnell and Son. BUFF: 1, Hodge, straight as a pencil, good wings and tail, takes perch like a winner; 2, Mugford, not so large, but still a good one; 3, Parnell and Son, also good. TKD., ETC., YELL.: 1, 2, Parnell and Son, both good, will improve yet. BUFF: 1, 3, Parnell and Son, 1st very neat and stylish, 3rd a good bird; 2, Hodge, nice size with neck-mark. CINN. OR CINN. TKD.: 1, 2, Parnell and Son, 1st yellow self, a real beauty; 2nd a buff, very neat. JUNIORS NOR.: 1, 3, Jeffery; 2, Bastard. YORKS.: 1, Bastard.—J. N. JEFFERY, Hon. Sec.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

The members held their annual First Feather Show at headquarters, the City Arms Hotel, on June 20th. Several nice youngsters were staged, notably Messrs. Taylor and Tristem's clear yellow Norwich, which secured special for best bird in the show. Mr. Keegan's cinnamon-marked Yellow Yorkshire, and Mr. Lovell's ticked Buff Yorkshire were also outstanding exhibits. All were much admired, and with luck should do good service for their respective owners. The hon. sec., Mr. W. H. Manley, as usual had everything well arranged, and left nothing to be desired. Mr. J. H. Payne judged.

NOR., CL. YELL.: 1, spl, 2, Taylor and Tristem, leader bird of much merit, grand in quality, deep colour, good shape, nicely cut away; 2nd, marked on head, good shape, nice feather and quality. BUFF: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Taylor and Tristem, winner rich in colour, good shape, full of quality, nice head, neck, and back; 2nd, good shape and feather, wings, well braced; 3rd close up. YORKS., YELL.: 1, Keegan, cinn.-mkd., close as a Java in feather, nice quality, slim built, stands well; 2, Morgan, rare length, well up on leg, grand colour; 3, Martin, clear, nice quality and stand, close-fitting jacket, neat wings and tail; vhc, Buckland; hc, c, Bull. BUFF: 1, 3, Lovell, leader ticked on head, stands like a veteran, grand quality, straight as a rush; 3rd, clear, beautiful feather and quality, stands well; 2, Keegan, cinn.-mkd., close as a Java, full of quality; vhc, Buckland; hc, Newman; c, Martin. NOVICE YORKS.: 1, Morgan, good coloured and lengthy yellow; 2, 3, vhc, Smartbwaite, all close together. A.O.V.: 1, Newman, buff green Yorksbire.

OUTINGS.

LEEDS C.B.S.

By the kind permission of the Rev. B. and Mrs. Hemsworth, Monk Fryston Hall, a number of members had a most enjoyable outing on June 20th, accompanied by some friends. A pleasant party assembled at the Leeds New Station, and travelled by special train to Monk Fryston, arriving there at 3.15. A pleasant and interesting afternoon was spent in viewing the fine collection of Foreign birds and animals at the aviaries. The party was met by Mr. Levitt, the avienkurist, who took them round, giving interesting information. After this followed a sumptuous tea, which was welcomed and done justice to by everyone. The party then rambled through the park and woods, some on to the cricket ground, where sports were going on. It was a grand outing; the weather was ideal, and it was a treat to all to be able to wander in the beautiful grounds, it being such a pleasant change from treading the hard and dusty streets which we are daily accustomed to. The time quickly passed, when we had to retrace our steps to the station for our return journey.

GUISBOROUGH AND DISTRICT "PRIORY" C.B.S.

By the kind permission of Colonel and Mrs. Chaloner, a few of our members met for a ramble in the woods on their estate on Whit-Monday. Being a general holiday, and a beautiful day for the races (human and otherwise), we could only muster ten. We started on our walking tour, passing the church and the famous Old Abbey, where many Jackdaws, Starlings, and Owls are reared each year, the Owls scaring many a person. Passing through a field and into an avenue, we heard the Wren singing his bright song, quite a loud one for so small a bird. Entering another field, a young Blackbird, very forward, flew past us, and alighted in a ditch. Just above it, a pied Wagtail was flying to and fro catching flies. One of our group pointed out a Starling's nest in a tree, where he witnessed a Crow trying hard to get in, probably for the eggs or young. Crossing another field into the main road leading to the entrance of the woods, we found another member and our worthy chairman awaiting us. Directly we entered the bridge leading to the entrance of the plantation, we were greeted by the songs of the Chaffinch and Whitethroat. The undergrowth was very thick just here, and we flushed four young Thrushes. One was caught easily, and we all had a peep at it before we liberated it. Just above our heads was a Thrush sitting on four eggs. As we went further on, the place seemed literally full of bird life, making the place ring with the different songs and the cooing of the wild Pigeons. Redpolls seemed very numerous, but we did not hear of one of their nests being found. A stream running through the centre of the wood the beautiful Kingfisher used to frequent, but the water being polluted by sulphur water from the mines, no fish can live in it, so that the king of colour has had to find other places where fish do abound. One of our members had seen a pair some three miles from here, so they have not deserted the neighbourhood altogether. A few of us kept to the stream; others in the centre and top of the wood, finding many nests, including that of a Bullfinch. We all gathered round one nest of four young on the low branch of a fir tree; we could not decide whose nest it was, so a few stayed to see the parents, and one member declared it to be a Robin's, so we left it at such. But a little further on by the side of the stream a similar one was found, and as we had a better opportunity of concealing ourselves we stayed to watch the old birds. It was a Blackcap's nest, and within ten yards of us the male bird burst into lovely song, each one looking on it with envy, and loth to leave it. However, a little further on in the bank was found a Lesser Whitethroat's nest containing six young. This was a case of overcrowding, by the look of it. On the branch of a tree was the neatest nest of all, the Chaffinch's, containing four young ones ready for leaving it. Thrushes' nests with eggs and young were very numerous, but there was a scarcity of Blackbirds. The signal was here given to have our photographs taken, but, oh, the midges! They were enough to devour us, and it was with difficulty we kept still until the operation was over. According to the proof, we did somehow manage it. Close to us was a young rabbit, minus its head; probably the weasel had been at work. On climbing the embankment, a lot of newly-strewn pieces of rotten wood at the bottom of a tree caused us to examine it, and we found it to be the home of the Woodpecker, as we discovered three round holes, one recently made; hence the pieces at the bottom. These holes appeared to be in a direct line with each other, and about three feet apart. Just as we were leaving it, out popped the Woodpecker. In crossing the stream we saw the Dipper (one of our members slipping in the centre) and the Snipe. We next heard the Cuckoo, and by an imitation brought it overhead. We noticed a small bird chasing it, and as we looked at it a Green Woodpecker flew past. Still following the stream, we saw the Spotted Flycatcher's, Tom Tit's, Wren's, and Hedge Sparrow's nests. At the edge of another plantation we espied a Blue Tit darting about the grass, and, catching it, we found it to be an adult with its tail all frayed, as though it had been caged; but it flew off with rapidity when released. Now we arrived in a lane leading to the main road, where many Blackbirds, Thrushes, Blue Tits, Whitethroats, Starlings, Peewits, Robins, and Larks were seen and heard. About a mile further on the road brought us back to the abbey and churchyard, where a Stonechat was darting about on the tombstones. On our return to headquarters, at about 6.30, our host had prepared a grand tea, which we were ready for, and did ample justice to. Many kind words were spoken in praise of our worthy president, for the privileges we had in rambling on the estate. It was one of the most pleasant tours we ever experienced. After tea we at once started business in electing the judge for our open cage bird show on January 1st, 1909, and decided on Mr. Jacob Mackley. We hope to have some of the finest exhibits, and the most bumping entry it has ever been our pleasure to have. —G. ATKINSON, Hon. Sec.

GLASGOW & WEST OF SCOTLAND N.M.B. AND F.B.C.

On June 13th we went for our annual outing to Balloch. We had a good company, and notwithstanding the too earnest attentions of old Jupitor Pluvius, formed quite a merry party as we steamed out of Glasgow Central en route for the "Bonny banks of Loch Lomond." The run down in the train was very pleasant, the route taking us right along the famous estuary of the Clyde, and giving a panoramic view of the mammoth shipbuilding and engineering yards for which our river stands unrivalled. On we went away from the (at first) seemingly endless rows of tenements out into the green fields fresh from the recent rains, and showing magnificent in all the delicate hues of ever-changing greens. The pleasant river, bordered by the grassy banks, the hay well forward, the corn and wheat showing bright and green, and giving promise of a good crop later, the trees heavy with fresh young foliage, and the hawthorn hedges flourishing white, spreading its delicious fragrance all over the meadows—these and the smiling valley all cloistered in by the lofty Kilpatrick hills formed a fitting gateway to the fairyland of lake and mountain beyond. Dumbarton's rock and castle are passed on the left, and Renton and Alexandria flash past, and then we are on the platform at Balloch, the rain being but a memory, with the sun shining brightly, giving prospect of a glorious afternoon. Still three hours till tea-time, and one of Scotland's prettiest spots to explore, we lost no time in getting under way, and, like birdy men, were soon keen on the look-out for the tiny homes of our feathered friends. So many and varied were the nests, and so thoroughly enjoyable was the search, that the party broke up into little groups, each taking its own section and glorying in its own discoveries, not forgetting to enjoy to the full the beauties of the Loch, the grandeur of the mountains, and the quieter shady solitudes of the glades and glens brightened by the babbling prattle of the purling brooks. But, alas! "Old Time was stealing on," and soon the Loch echoed with the shouts that brought us all together to our rendezvous, where it had been previously arranged we should have our "photo took." There was an inn—there must have been an inn, for only the temperance party arrived, and the photo which was taken leaves the others out. The walk back to our hotel was most interestingly spent in comparing notes and dilating on our several discoveries, and the wonderful tales had not yet ceased when "mine host" arrived with the "cup that cheers, but not inebriates." But even wonders pall on an empty stomach, and for awhile silence more eloquent than speech proclaimed that justice was being done to the good fare provided. Tea over, with renewed vigour (which a good wash had something to do with), we sallied forth new worlds to conquer; while some betook themselves to football and rounders, the remainder boarded our chartered motor launch and went off for a sail up the Loch. If the enjoyment of the earlier hours was grand, this was glorious.

"As sitting there at ease we spied
The wondrous scene unfold,
The limpid loch, the islands fair,
The mountain's touring heights,
The grassy slopes, the coverts dark,
By gloamings changeful lights."

Arcadia for a little, then back again to the river, and just by way of a change the mists began to gather and—"down came the rain." But what cared we? The open door of the hostel welcomed us, and the cheery parlour was bright and comfortable. A united company, we enlivened the remaining hour with toast, song, and story, and then entrained for home, where, after a pleasant ride, we duly arrived contented and happy after a well-spent day in Nature's wonderland.—R. A. BROWN.

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping. That volume is

and this year it has made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

Such Marvellous Value has never before been offered.

See what You Get for Your Money.

Coloured Plate.

An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramble-finch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

Calendar.

A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"Work of the Year."

A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"Washing and Preparing Birds for Exhibition."

Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries."

A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many excellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"Pairs Matched for Breeding."

A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"The Breeding of Hybrids."

An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"The Keeping of British Birds."

A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"Some Easily Obtainable Foreign Birds.

IN THE COURTS.

THE "RIFT IN THE LUTE" AT PECKHAM.

Show Manager's Balance Sheet In Dispute.

At the Lambeth County Court on Thursday, June 18th, Wm. Hodson, secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham Cage Bird Society, sued Geo. F. Woolhouse, traveller, to recover £8 3s. 9d. Mr. Williams appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alfred Nisbet for the defendant, who paid into court £3 17s. 8d., with a denial of liability.

The case first came before Judge Emden, but by agreement was referred to the Registrar (Mr. Pritchard). Mr. Nesbit, in the temporary absence of Mr. Williams, explained the circumstances of his case to the Registrar. He said that a bird show was held at the Peckham Public Hall last October, and the defendant took on the duties of hon. show manager, he then being one of the members of the Dulwich and Peckham Cage Bird Society. He had absolute control to work the show to the best advantage, and in connection therewith he had to collect certain monies and make certain expenditure, and, of course, render an account. In due course, after the show, he rendered a preliminary account which was not intended for audit, but to show roughly how the financial position stood, and subsequently he would render a full detailed account which would, of course, be audited. The result of the figures showed that there was a balance of £3 17s. 8d. due from the defendant, and he said that, subject to the auditors being satisfied, he would pay that amount over. But the preliminary account was audited in the absence of the defendant, and instead of the auditors or the secretary pointing out to the defendant any discrepancies or any items they were going to disallow, they made out an account of their own, disallowed certain items, and found that a sum of £8 3s. 9d. was due from the defendant to the society. They did not intimate in any way what items they objected to, but left the defendant to discover them for himself. Shortly after he had received the demand a solicitor's letter came to hand, ask-for payment of the £8 3s. 9d. The defendant replied expressing his surprise, and stating that he was quite sure that the solicitor's clients had not put him (the solicitor) in possession of the whole of the facts. He added that he would like to know out of curiosity how his clients made up the claim. In answer to that the defendant received the summons.

Mr. Nisbet said he intended calling evidence to prove that what he had paid into court was all that was due. There was an item of "carriage of birds" which the auditors had reduced from 4s. 8d. to 4s.; they had disallowed an item of 2s. under the head of "petty expenditure," and which represented the cost of a journey to Croydon; they had knocked down the "carriage on specials" from 4s. 6d. to 3s. 6d., and "wires and telephones" from 3s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. They had allowed only £3 9s. 2d. for "labour and assistance," when the defendant had paid away £4 7s. 10d., and had reduced "postage" from £8 2s. 8½d. to £6 2s. 8½d. Further, they had disallowed 1s. 6d. paid for Harrison's book of "sold" tickets for putting on cages when birds were sold. Since the defendant made out his account, however, and the summons had been served, he had fortunately discovered a receipt for 7s. 6d. for refreshments and another for 10s. for carriage on belated "specials." On the receipt side there was only one item he had to deal with. On the preliminary account the defendant put down £6 6s. as an estimate of the sales of tickets, but in fact it was only £5 6s.

An Expletive not an Explanation.

Mr. Williams's clerk denied that the defendant had not been given an opportunity of giving an explanation. He had a letter from the defendant, dated 22nd April, in which he wrote that if the society would shew a balance sheet signed by both auditors he would pay the amount that was due. We should not have pressed the case so severely but for the fact that the defendant gave no explanation of these items, simply putting a cross to some and in one case marking an item as a "Lie." We could not accept anything like that.

Mr. Nesbit: It was the duty of the auditors to ask for any explanations.—The Registrar: They ought to have sent to the defendant saying that they wanted further information as to these points.

Mr. F. S. Matthes, one of the auditors, was called, and dealt first of all with the post book, which he said had been wrongly cast up. There was an item of £2 for postage put down in one lump sum.—In cross-examination Mr. Nesbit asked "There has been a split hasn't there in this little concern?"—Mr. Williams's clerk: "I don't think that concerns this case."—Mr. Matthes: "There was no split when this audit was going on."—Mr. Nesbit: "Which camp are you in now, the plaintiff's or defendant's?"—Mr. Matthes: "I was a member of the old society, and I simply renewed my subscription."—Mr. Nesbit: "And some of the members have started a new society?"—No, some of the members have remained in the old society."—"But some have started a new society?"—"That is so."—"And I suggest to you that this case would never have been heard of except for that split?"—"I should have been here on that balance sheet on my honesty."—"Do you mean that you charge Mr. Woolhouse with dishonesty?"—I say this: that Mr. Woolhouse's balance-sheet was wrong, and as an auditor I would not pass it."—"But that was not intended for a balance sheet for audit."—"That was."—"He says it was not."—"I have letters to prove that he says it was."—In further cross-examination, Mr. Matthes said that on the books the show showed a small profit, but all the accounts were not in.

The Defendant Speaks.

The defendant, Mr. Woolhouse, was called at this point. He stated that he spent on the show all his spare time night and day for months before and months after it was held. He was given only 5s. to run the show, and it was because he had to borrow money that he was so sure about what he had spent. He explained, for instance, that he spent £2 of his own money and £6 that he borrowed on the purchase of stamps, and, therefore, when he came to reckon up his post-book to find that the total was not £8 odd he knew there was a mistake and discovered it in the casting.

The Registrar: Why did you not enter these letters of appeal and post-cards which you have put down in a lump sum of £2, just as you entered the letters individually in the earlier days?"—The defendant explained that he found the entries were not coming in as they ought to, and to prevent a "financial fiasco" he sent an appeal round by post. He had all his work cut out at that late period to get this out, and no time to enter individual letters.

In reply to Mr. Williams's clerk, he said he did not recollect tearing a leaf out of the postage book; he did not know what the question was meant to suggest. Even if he did tear a leaf out it would not alter the balance and the amount he had spent.

Mr. Wm. Goodwin, proprietor of the Herne Tavern, who was hon. treasurer of the society, said he personally bought £5 worth of stamps for the defendant and either used them or saw them all used. Witness actually stuck on as many as £8 worth of stamps. As the society allowed the defendant only 5s. to run the show on, witness had to finance him.—The Registrar: Are you prepared to swear that £8 worth of stamps were used?—Yes, positively: and more.

The Judge's Appetite.

The defendant was then taken through the other items in dispute. In regard to a reduction of 2s., he stated that was spent on a journey to Croydon, which was taken by him to get the society credit for their printing. As to an item of 2s. 6d., that was for Mr. Weston's (the judge's) lunch and refreshment, and for which he (the defendant) held a receipt.—Mr. Williams: Surely that can't be allowed!

Another item of 7s. 6d., the defendant explained, was for sandwiches and sodas for the staff. The Mayor enjoyed some of the soda water at the opening. (Laughter).

The defendant complained strongly that he was not given an opportunity of explaining all these matters to the auditor.—Cross-examined, the defendant admitted that he wrote against several items struck out or altered by the auditor the word "wrong," his reason for not giving any explanation as to them and why they were wrong being that he was not asked.

A Scene in Court.

Mr. Williams began asking what the defendant meant by writing about "malicious defamation," but there was so much hub-bub from the crowd of interested and opposing parties in court, that he had to break off and suggest that one of the defendant's friends should be ejected. In the commotion the question was not answered.

In the end the Registrar said the difficulty arose through the auditing of the first account. The auditor going through it ought to have presumed that it was only an estimate. The largest item was that of postage, and that had been proved up to the hilt.—Mr. Williams: I submit that the defendant brought all this upon himself by his foolishness.—The Registrar: I find £2 9s. 2d. due to the plaintiff and the defendant has paid £3 17s. 8d. into court, but as that was done with a denial of liability, the defendant does not get his costs. I am afraid there has been a lot of feeling in the matter.—Mr. Nesbit: I think you have hit the nail on the head, Sir. Any information asked for by the auditors would have been readily given, if it had not been for the feeling all through.

The Registrar made an order for the payment of £2 9s. 2d. to the plaintiff, with costs on that amount up to the time of payment into court; the defendant to take out the balance of £1 8s. 6d., with costs on that amount from the payment into court.

IF YOU ARE SEEKING

an ideal food to mix with your Colour Feed try

and its results will please you.

Being in flaky powder form it mixes readily with all kinds of colour food, and is at once handy, clean, and gives far superior results to egg and bread crumbs.

The following unsolicited testimonials from persons who tried it in practically its experimental stage, speak for themselves :—

PRESTON ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY. October 18th, 1907.

This is to certify that the members of the Preston Ornithological Society have this year during the breeding season, and time of moulting, used upwards of 100 lbs. of your Bird Milk (Woodland Brand) in the soft food of their cage birds, and feel more than satisfied that it is the most suitable ingredient to mix with their soft food. This year our birds are larger, stronger and possess more vigour than ever before.

Signed on behalf of members. W. Haworth, Chairman; W. Lewis, Vice-Chairman; J. P. Leeming, Treasurer; J. W. Cleminson, Hon. Sec.; J. T. Swarbrick, Assist. Hon. Sec.

Broughton, Preston. Dear Sirs, I have much pleasure in writing you that the birds I won with in the Yorkshire section at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908, were fed with bread colour feed, and your Woodland Bird Milk. I used no eggs in my bird room all last season.

I am of opinion that one box containing 1 lb. is equal to 60 eggs; and this is the opinion of my friends in the Fancy. C. Blackhurst, M.R.C.V.S.

Canary Breeding for Beginners - -

Post free, 7d.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

No. 217.

USEFUL METHOD OF SOAKING AND DRYING RAPE SEED.

Sent by T. Craighill, 20, Yates Street, Rhodes, Middleton, Manchester.

I find this idea to be very useful. It is an easy way of soaking rape-seed and also washing it and draining all the water out. It does not require to be put into a rag to be dried; it is simply put into a sieve only costind 1d. at any stall in the market. I put my seed in the sieve and then put both in a tumbler of water. After soaking them over night I put them under the water tap until the seed is thoroughly washed. Then I work the seed toward the sides, making it nest-shape, and in that way the water drains away from it, leaving it ready for use. This saves time and labour, and also the seeds, as when they are dabbed in a rag one wastes more seed than he wishes.—T. Craighill.

No. 218.

NOVEL WAY OF OPENING DOORS IN BREEDING-CAGE PARTITIONS.

Sent by E. Wilson, 7, Catherine Terrace, Fulwell, Sunderland.

This applies to those who have round openings in the partitions of their breeding-cages. The idea will enable them to open and close the divisions without frightening the birds. A represents the cage front and B a piece of wire soldered to it. The circle represents the round door shut. To make it, bend a piece of wire to the shape of D, passing the end through E, and bending it over. To open the door lift the wire at notch B and pass it so that notch C rests on the place which B previously occupied. I have these doors on my breeding-cages, and they answer very well.—E. Wilson.

LARKHALL C.B.C.

Usual fortnightly meeting held in Miners' Hall on June 20th, the business being the election of office bearers for ensuing year. The following gentlemen were duly elected:—President, Mr. J. Rundell; vice-president, Mr. R. McLuckey; treasurer, Mr. D. Clarkson; secretary, J. Pollock, with a committee of nine. It was agreed to hold a young bird show, date to be fixed at next meeting, when a large attendance is requested. Anyone interested in cage birds will be heartily welcomed for membership. The subscription is 2s. per year, which entitles members to all the privileges of the Society.—J. Pollock, Secretary, 30, Marshall-street, Larkhall.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

A meeting was held at the Gunner's Arms, Oldham, on June 20th. A grand muster of fanciers attended, there being representatives from Oldham, Glossop, Stockport, Denton, Middleton, Rawtenstall, etc. Mr. Garner (Hazel Grove) was in the chair, and a large amount of business was gone through. This included the club's patronage, a large number of applications being put before the meeting, showing that the Association is advancing in popularity, in spite of pessimists. We also noticed a few visitors at the meeting, and a little bird whispered that one or two of them intended becoming members of our Society. A number of Societies were selected for our cup's shows, and these will probably be confirmed at our next meeting, which will be held at an early date. We cordially invite Fanciers to join, and also old members, to give us the support necessary to keep our two beautiful varieties at the front. Subscriptions now due.—J. Rukin, hon sec

TWITTERINGS.

Members of the City of Birmingham C.B.S. should note that the usual meeting on July 1st stands postponed until July 8th.

The Suffolk C.B.S. hold their annual young bird show on July 11th, writes Mr. W. Barritt, the hon. sec., when Mr. C. Simpson will judge.

My address in future will be 6, Steadman Street, Birches Head, Hanley, Staffs, writes Mr. Thomas Hawley (late of Gibbins Street).

Our First Feather show will be held on July 4th, writes Mr. J. Butterworth, sec. of the Rochdale O.C. Mr. J. Naden has been elected to judge.

We are holding our First Feather show on July 4th, writes Mr. Rd. Lambert, sec. of the Clitheroe and Dis. C.B.S. Mr J. Trengove (Rishton), will judge.

The judges engaged for our annual club show to be held November 14th, writes Mr. G. Hislop, sec. of the Stirling and Dis. O.S., are Messrs. D. J. Gardner (Bathgate), and W. Muirhead (Bonnybridge).

In noticing Mr. Garthwaithe's now celebrated "Lifebelt" food, we remarked that it was noted for its efficiency in rearing birds from the nest, and would add that this, of course, includes while in the nest as well.

Will all secretaries kindly note that I have removed from 2, Brook Street, Rishton, where I resided during last show season, writes Mr. E. L. Winter, to 8, Sunny Bowers, Little Harwood, Blackburn, Lancs.

When you ask for Ramsden's Peppers see you get them. Don't be put off with inferior brands, pushed by traders for the sake of extra profit. Ramsden's Peppers are the best procurable and absolutely pure.—ADVT.

Queen's Park C.B.A. young bird show is due to-day (Saturday) in the Emmanuel Hall, Harrow Road, W., from 2 to 9 p.m. There will be a nice lot of birds on view, we understand, and this fixture is well worth a visit.

I have sent three lots of Canaries to Canada (two into Montreal), and one to France this last week, through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. Rudd, the well-known specialist of Norwich, and I consider this not bad for June.

The Wibsey C.B.S. and Windhill, Shipley O.S. try conclusions at cricket to-day (June 27th), on the Windhill cricket ground, and visitors desirous of witnessing the prowess of these fanciers, and joining in the fun, are given a hearty welcome to be present.

The Bradford West C.B.A. is another Yorkshire society which is indulging in a cricket match to-day (Saturday), this being a members' affair. Wielding the willow promises to become as popular a pastime as "rambling."

Allow me to thank through your columns, writes Mr. G. F. Woolhouse (East Dulwich), the many friends who have congratulated me on the verdict in the recent action taken against me by the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. I feel very grateful to them.

A members' and open show, in connection with the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. has been arranged for July 2nd. The schedule, a copy of which we have received from the sec., Mr. W. Hodson, comprises 23 members' classes, and four open classes.

The C.B.U. will not allow us to have November 20th and 21st for our annual show, writes Mr. J. C. Hayes, hon. sec. of the Rotherham C.B.S., as we clash with Hull. We have, therefore, chosen another date, which is November 2nd and 3rd, which we hope fanciers will note.

We have arranged to hold our First Feather show on July 11th, at the Mackworth Hotel, stock-room, Swansea, writes Mr. Alf. Hutchings, sec. of the Swansea and Dis. C.B.S. Messrs. D. A. S. Longdon and W. Love will officiate as judges. All birds are to be staged by 3 p.m.

The Pelton and Dis. C.B.S. has changed its headquarters, writes Mr. Lance Hall, the sec., owing to the landlord leaving. The members' First Feather show will be held on July 11th, at the Colliery Inn, Pelton Fell, with Mr. T. Dixon (Bedlington) as judge. There will be 18 classes.

The London and Counties O.A. has arranged an excellent classification for its young bird show, held to-day (Saturday), at the "Goat and Compasses," 341, Euston Road, N.W., with Mr. W. Shakespeare as judge. A fine display is anticipated, both of Canaries, British and foreign birds.

We have received from Mr. F. W. Hamer, the hon. sec. of the Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S., a schedule of the members' young stock and British bird show, to be held on July 9th, at "The Two Brewers," Greenwich, There are to be 21 classes, and an excellent show is being looked forward to.

We are holding our annual Nest Feather show to-day June 27th, at headquarters, White Swan Hotel, at 3 p.m., writes Mr. Chas. Draper, hon. sec. of the Leicester and Leicestershire Hand-in-Hand C.B.S. Mr. E. Fox (Long Eaton), will judge. All fanciers are invited, and there is no charge for admission.

Kindly thank all who wrote respecting my advert. which appeared in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS, anent hen Canaries for sale, writes Mr. W. H. Uzzell (Birmingham). I might say this is my first advertisement, and the letters were too many for me to reply to. There is no doubt this is the most instructive paper in my estimation that deals with bird life.

Our Nest Feather show will be held on July 11th, in the Montgomery Hall, write Messrs. Lindsay and Bingham, the hon. secs. of the Sheffield and Dis. C.B.S.

In the report of the Scotch Fancy Canary National Derby O.A., my name is given as Thorns. This is a mistake; it should be Thoms.—R. THOMS (Dundee).

We note that a proposal is to come before the members of the Stirling and Dis. O.S. at the next meeting to change the meeting night from Wednesday to Saturday.

I won the all-England singing contest at the Prince Albert Inn, writes Mr. R. Solomon, with a Linnet bought from Mr. J. Clark, of Leeds, and wish to thank him for the same

On Wednesday next, July 1st, the Battersea Society's open young bird show is held at the "Duchess of Devonshire," Lavender Road, Clapham Junction. We hear there is every prospect of this being an exceptionally interesting affair, and Metropolitan fanciers should make a note of the date.

Mr. W. E. Teschemaker, who will be known to our readers by reason of the interesting articles he has contributed to our columns, has this season, we learn, succeeded in breeding the Cirl Bunting in captivity, rearing three young birds to maturity. This is the first instance, we believe, of success with this species.

The young bird show of the City and Suburban A.C.B., due on Saturday next, July 4th, has an extended classification, and no fewer than 17 classes are devoted to Hybrids, British and foreign birds. There is a fine list of specials, and the sec., Mr. Wynn, asks us to notify that he has inadvertently omitted one, viz., 2s. for the best bird in classes 19 and 20.

Through an oversight I omitted to report the awards in the novice Norwich class of our late First Feather show, which are as follows, writes Mr. G. A. Jefferys, hon. sec. of the South London Col. and F.A.: 1 and 3, J. Palmer; 2 and v.h.c., J. Luckham. The points gained for points cup, 1908, by the two competitors for the show, are Mr. Palmer, 30, and Mr. Luckham, 9.

It is with deep regret that we learn of the bereavement which has fallen upon Mr. Jacob Mackley, of the world-famous firm of bird specialists of Norwich, who on June 15th had the misfortune to lose his wife. The deceased lady was 57 years of age, and was a keen lover of birds and a devoted helpmate to her husband Her kindliness had endeared her to the local fanciers, and their sympathy has been warmly extended to Mr. Mackley in his hour of trouble. The funeral took place on June 19th, before a large gathering of friends, bird lovers being conspicuous. The numerous floral tributes made a beautiful display, and testified to the respect in which the late Mrs. Mackley was held.

The Southern Yorkshire C.C. handbook for 1908-9 has reached us, and from it we gather that the club had a very successful time last year, the nice little balance of £3 3s. 7d. remaining in hand after members had been liberally catered for at the shows with special prizes, diplomas, etc. Lovers of the Yorkshires in the South should support the club by sending in their names for membership to Mr. J. W. Rennie, the hon. sec., Junction Hotel, Andover, Hants

Kindly state for the benefit of members and intending members that the last day for joining and paying subscriptions is June 30th, writes Mr. T. C. Crawhall, hon. sec. of the Northern Y.C.C. I intend having rules and list of members published as soon after that date as possible, so that to be included in the list it is necessary that members should pay up. The subscription is 2s. 6d. per annum (entrance fee 1s.), so that we ought to have more support from the lovers of the Yorkshire Canary in the north. Our district covers the four northern counties, and it is intended to give some of our patronage to the west and south districts should the number of members warrant it. Will secretaries desiring patronage please notify me?

The Open Norwich P.C.

All societies desirous of having the Open Norwich Plainhead Club's patronage are invited to send in their applications along with judges' names and number of classes, to reach the club secretary not later than Saturday. July 4th. Intending members wishing to have their names included in the Year Book, should apply before the above date—O. Mitchell, hon. sec., 13, Lodge Terrace, Bowling, Bradford.

Scottish British Bird and M.C.

Will secretaries please note, when making application for club patronage, that applications will only be considered where a member of this club is to officiate as judge? This rule was added at the general meeting in March, and was duly reported in CAGE BIRDS. I have a good many applications where this rule has been ignored. All information as to membership, etc., may be had from me.—A. W. WATSON, sec., 8, Commercial Street, Leith.

"Pet Rabbits, Cavies and Mice."

This is the title of the latest handbook issued to help those devoted to live-stock hobbies. The object of the author of "Pet Rabbits, Cavies, and Mice" (the well-known "G.G.") has been to provide in simple, handy form a Complete Manual for the tyro who is contemplating taking up the keeping of any of these furry favourites as a hobby. In addition to full directions as to housing and feeding, the various diseases to which they are subject are dealt with, and the aspect of profit in their cultivation is not lost sight of. The exhibition side is also touched on. Amateur fur fanciers will read with pleasure and profit to themselves Mr. Gardner's lucid and practical observations—based on a lifetime's experience, and as judge, expert, and writer. It is illustrated from photographs of winning specimens. A copy can be had post free for 1s. 2d. from the Publisher, F. Carl, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

SELECTION versus INBREEDING.

A notable gathering of Metropolitan Canary enthusiasts assembled last week in response to the invitation of the London and Provincial Ornithological Society to hear Mr. R. L. Crisp start a discussion on the subject of "Inbreeding." Amongst those present were Messrs. G. Crabb (in the chair), J. W. Ramsden, Lambert-Brown, Hodson, Hodder, Couzens, Males, Matthes, Scott, Shepherd, Curtis, Lathleff, Goodwin, Day, R. J. Pretty, Braund, Munday, Lugg, Cunningham, Tringham, Simpson, Picard, Oldaker, Dobson, Pearce, Burn, Midgley, Rennie, Meredith, Robson, Newley, Mortlock, Hazell, and Carl.

Mr Crisp delivered a slashing attack upon indiscriminate inbreeding and its professors, and declared that whilst he had no objection to the mating of co-related perfect specimens, he was a firm advocate of the principle of breeding by selection and from the surface value of the Canary rather than from its pedigree.

A most interesting discussion followed, many speakers participating. We hope to publish some of the observations made in a future issue. A vote of thanks to Mr. Crisp, proposed by Mr. Crabb and seconded by Mr. Ramsden, was carried with acclammation.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

THE Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C. held on Saturday last their committee meeting for fixing up the trophies and specials for competition during the season to come. These are both numerous and valuable, and should make the competitions interesting and stimulate the cultivation of the variety. Societies wishing to have the patronage must provide at least four classes for C.M. Yorkshires, and all applications should be sent before the next meeting, on July 25th, as at this meeting the patronage will be allocated among the shows applying.

WIBSEY and Windhill Societies have arranged a cricket fixture for to-day (Saturday) to take place at Windhill, and without doubt there will be some heavy scoring on both sides, as some of the participants have put in a lot of practice lately.

THE Tong Society held their first members' show on Saturday last, and the fanciers in the district were greatly interested, there being plenty of visitors to the show. About 40 odd birds were on view. Wakefield O.S. also had a succesful show, with some 60 or more birds staged. The British section was strong, some exceptionally smart birds were exhibited, while among the Yorkshires and Norwich were many typical birds.

YORKSHIRE Union delegates meet to-day (Saturday). A suggestion is to be brought forward in regard to the expenses of delegates belonging to those societies whose attendance necessitated a railway journey and consequent expense. It has been thought for a long time that something should be done to endeavour to minimise the outlay of outside societies, and the scheme to be submitted will at least open up the question—perhaps bring to a head a subject that needs looking into.

THE Shipley O.S. trip on Sunday last proved to be the great success I predicted. Those who had never visited the district before were astounded at the ever-changing grandeur and beauty of the scenery, and will remember it for many years to come. The weather turned out lovely, being perfect for driving, and everybody voted it one of the most enjoyable days that could possibly be spent. But, who was it that missed the train? "STRAIGHT 'UN."

A Correction.

In the report of the meeting of delegates of the London societies which appeared in our columns last week, it was stated that Mr. H. E. Tringham, who presided, represented the London and Counties O.A. This was an error; it should have been the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.

"Bird Notes."

"Variation in birds" is the title of an article which appears in the current monthly issue of "Bird Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club. It is from the able pen of Mr. F. Finn, B.A., F.Z.S., and constitutes a valuable contribution to the inquiries constantly being made into the subject. Mrs. Warren Vernon has written some notes on the subject of the frontispiece, which is a beautifully-coloured representation of the Mexican or Green Jay. Mr. T. R. Hadley's notes on the Orange-checked Waxbills and those by Mr. W. T Page on "Some Recent Acquisitions" are very readable, and go to complete a truly interesting number.

Ayr and Dist. C.B.C.—June 29, Good Templar Hall, New Bridge, Street, 7.30. Lecture by Mr. R. McKay, on "Ailments of Cage Birds." All friends and fanciers invited.—C. Irvine.

Altrincham C.B.S.—June 30, Victoria Restaurant 8 p.m. Lecture on the Border Canary, by Mr. S Hadwin, of Liverpool. Fanciers and friends invited —B. Head.

Broughty Ferry C.B S.—July 1, Baker's Rooms, King Street, 8. Important business.—R. Whitton.

Bradford West C.B.A.—June 27, Red Lion Hotel, 3. Members' Cricket Match.—H. Clegg.

Carmarthenshire P.P. and C.B.S. — Committee meeting, June 29, 8.30. Monthly meeting, on July 1. The first Table Show of Cage Birds. Both meetings at Plough Hotel. Anyone interested welcomed.—Fred. King.

City of Dundee and Dist. N.M. and B.B.A. — July 1, Doig's Rooms, 8. Business important.—A. Miller.

Crook Original C.B , R. and P.S.—July 1, Crown Hotel, 7. Chiefly Young Stock Show details.—A. Bowes.

Chitheroe and Dist. C.B.S.—July 2, Bennett's Tea Rooms, Moor Lane, 8.—R. Lambert.

City of Birmingham C.B.S.—July 8, Crown Hotel, Station Street, 8. Special meetiug to receive entries for show. Usual meeting will not be held on July 1.—J. H. de Maillet.

Coventry O.S.—July 1, Sydenham Palace, Ford Street, 8.30. Nest Feather Show, etc.—G. Peters.

Darlington C. and B.B.F.A.—July 1, George Hotel, 8. Open Show business and new Members enrolled. —R. S. Black.

Denholme and Thornton C B.S.—June 27, Bull's Head Inn, 5. Members' Show, also lecture, "Colour Feeding and Management of Canaries and Mules for Exhibition." By Mr. J. S. Clarkson. Fanciers invited.—F. W. Tomsett.

Dulwich O.S.—July 2, Herne, Forest Hill Road, S.E., 8.30. Committee Meeting, and election of new members.—Rogers and Mazzoni.

Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.—July 2, Peckham Public Hall, Rye Lane, Peckham, 7.30. Young Bird, also Brit. and For. Bird Show. Judge, Mr. J Robson. Fanciers invited.—W. Hodson.

East Bowling and Dist. B F.A.—June 27, Barley Mow. Judging at 3. First 1st Feather Show. Judge, Mr. W. Crnise.—J. E. Hudson.

Great Horton Good Intent O.S.—June 27, Church Schools, Southfield Lane, 3. Members' F.F. Show. Judge, Mr. S. Dean (Gt. Horton). Entries day of Show; meeting during judging.—H. Schofield.

Gt. Harwood and Dist. C.B.S.—June 29, Headquarters, Town Gate, 7.30. Business important.—G. Waddington.

Grimsby and Dist. O.S.—June 30, Hall of Science, Grimsby, 8. General business and Nest Feather Show, etc.; judge, Mr. D. Hope (Hull).—Moore and Crowston.

Hartlepools C.B.S.—July 1, Y.M.C.A., 7.30. Table Show of Norwich "Nest Feather."—Williams and Easby.

Hebden Bridge C B.F.A.—June 30, Sell's, Market Street, 7.30. Business important. Mr. Walsh (Halifax) will give an address on Colour Feeding, etc.—W. Simpson.

Houghton-le-Spring and Dist. C.B.S.—June 27, White Lion, 7.30. Business very important.—H Fenwick.

Keighley and Dist C.B.S.—June 30, King's Head Hotel, 7.30. Lecture by Mr. Wm. Cruise (Bradford). Friends cordially invited.—W. Wright.

Long Eaton and Dist. C.B.S.—July 4, Co-operative Class Room, 6.30. Business very important.—Turner and Barker.

Leigh and Dist C.B.S.—June 26, Railway Hotel, Leigh, 7.30. Final arrangements for Nest Feather Show. To fix date and select judges for Open Show, and other important business.—R. R. Davies.

Leicester C.B.S.—July 1, Hare and Pheasant Hotel, High Street, 8.30. Special meeting to receive entries for the Nest Feather Show.—J. A. Tyler.

Longton and Dist C.B.S.—June 30, Castle Inn, 8. To receive entries for Young Stock Show. C.B.U new rules and other important business.—E. Tams.

Leyton and Dist. C.B.A.—June 27. Young Stock Show of Canaries, Mules and British Birds, at Headquarters, Constitutional Club, High Road, Leyton. Doors open 2 p.m.—B. F. Foree.

Leek and Dist. C.B.S.—June 29, Headquarters, 7.30. To receive subscriptions, and Nest Feather Show business.—R. Hall.

Manningham C B.A.—June 27, Mowbray Arms, 2. Members' F.F. Show. Judge, Mr. J. Wilman (Shipley). Will members enter birds on Friday night.—F. Western.

Manchester and Northern Counties O.S.—June 29, Deansgate Hotel, 7.45. Entries and F. F. Show business.—E. Jones.

Morriston and Dist. C.B.S.—June 27, making out schedule for F. F. Show on July 25.—D. Jeremy.

Middlesbro' and Tees Side C.B.S —July 3, Crown Hotel, 7.30 p.m. Business very important. — A. Wake.

Nottingham and Notts. O.S.—July 1, Cobden Hall 8.30.—G. E. Wilkinson.

Neath and Dist F.A.—July 2, Volunteers' Drill Hall, 8. Members' Monthly Show, date of Open Show; competition for points for Cups. Resignation of secretary.—W. R. B. Richardson.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne C.B.S.—July 2, Lockhart's, 7.30. Entries will be taken for F. F. Show. Curry and Hutchinson.

Open Norwich P C.—July 4, Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, 6.30. All heartily invited to attend. Allotting of Club's patronage and specials, etc.—O. Mitchell.

Provincial Roller C.C.—June 27, Swan Hotel, Fountain Street, Manchester, 6. Paper by Mr. Lyons, on the Roller Song. Bring your birds to sing; friends invited. Mr. F. A. Lester (London) will be present.—W. Whittaker.

Pelton and Dist. C.B.S.—General meeting, Colliery Inn, Pelton Fell, at 7 p.m. All members must be paid up for the half year according to rule.—Lance Hall.—(Date not given.—Editor.)

Potteries and Dist. C.B.A. — July 2, Red Lion, Stoke, 8. Inter-Club Show, with Crewe Society.—J Simcock.

Queen's Park and Dist. C.B.A.—July 2, Emmanuel Hall, Harrow Road, W., 8. Distribution of Prizes, and report of Young Bird Show.—J. C. Birch Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S.—July 1, Temperance Club, 8. Balance sheet, report of show, election of officers, and other important business.—S. M. Clayton.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds." 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mules and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Park and Lake Aviculture—Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. M.B.O.U., &c. Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Swelling Near Vent.

"Durban."—It is impossible to say what the swelling is without seeing it. It may be a physical defect, or simply a deposit of fat, and in either case may be responsible for the bird's not singing for so long. If a valuable one, the best advice I can give you is to ask a veterinary, or your medical man, to look at it and advise you. If you think it is likely to be fat, limit the diet to Canary seed for a few weeks, and feed sparingly on this, allowing a liberal supply of green-food daily. In the drinking water, two days in three for a week or two, dissolve a piece of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea, and on each third day five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. Keep a supply of gritty sand in its cage always.

Young Gone Wrong.

"Flying Start."—Your feeding is decidedly at fault, and unless you alter it you will soon lose all the young. Give plain Canary seed only as a staple diet, and this in unlimited quantities. Twice a week give half a teaspoonful of hemp per bird, twice the quantity of dry rape, and twice a small teaspoonful of egg-food; or, as a substitute for this, you may give either the same amount of crushed sponge cake or a piece of bread soaked in milk and pressed nearly dry. Give these extra items on different days so that the birds have something different each day. Do not give dandelion—a small spray of chickweed will be much better, and, later on, you may give the half ripe seed stalks of the plantain quite freely. But do not be very liberal with green-food just at present. Keep the flights scrupulously clean, and let the birds have a regular supply of gritty sand. Keep the water supply pure and fresh. If this does not bring about an improvement in a few days add one drop each of aromatic sulphuric acid and tincture of gentian to each ounce of drinking water for two days. Do not, however, start drugging young birds if you can avoid it by correct feeding.

A Hint or Two Wanted.

Constant Reader.—The first hint I would give you is never to prick swellings on a bird, or try to bring them to a head by hot bathing, and particularly when they are close to the vent, unless you are sure you know the nature of them. I rather suspect that your hen was egg-bound, and what you took to be a "gathering" at the side of the vent was simply the retained egg in the cloaca, and your interference helped to bring about the end. Your best plan would have been to drop a drop of warm olive upon the vent, held the bird still a few moments whilst it was absorbed, given two drops of a mixture of equal parts of glycerine and brandy direct in the beak, and placed the bird in a cosy nest in a warm place. Holding her over a jug of hot water for a few moments whilst the steam played about the vent might have done good, but bathing with hot water was wrong. When the hen died you should have transferred the four eggs to one or two other hens just commencing to sit. Am afraid the hen you have now mated to the cock is one of those disappointing creatures that never do go farther than to raise one's hopes, just to make one believe they could do some great thing if they liked. It would have been more satisfactory had you procured a healthy young hen that was ready to go to nest, and, if possible, one that had just reared her first brood by herself, or one that had not yet been mated. But as things are now, we the pair a few sprays of chickweed, and one fair-sized leaf of dandelion daily. Each day until the hen goes to nest give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, and sprinkle over it a pinch of inga every second day, and a pinch of gold of pleasure seed on the alternate days. Twice a week give a teaspoonful of hemp, and every second day for a week add three drops of tincture of steel to the drinking water.

Cultivating Green-food.

Geo. Wood.—Not a bad idea, G. W., to utilise the little patch of ground behind your house to grow green-food for the birds. If you simply dug up the ground and left it, Nature would soon produce a crop of "self-sown" weeds, but you will do much better by keeping it neat and trim and growing what you like. You could not do better than plant a dozen roots of chicory and a dozen or so of dandelion; reserve a small patch in which to sow the waste seed from the cages, and plant the remainder with lettuce, making a sowing about once a month throughout the summer; also sow some mustard and cress. The surplus of the two last-named will come in useful for salads in the house. Groundsel, chickweed, and perhaps plantain and shepherd's-purse will spring up of their own accord. The two former should be used when they reach from two to three inches in height; the latter should be allowed to seed, and the sprays of half ripe seed used. When it is approaching winter get a small barrel with one end knocked out, or a couple of feet of large drain pipe, and fix securely endwise over a root or two of chicory and dandelion, bind a coat of hay around the outside, and you will be able to gather nice crisp young leaves all through the winter. The roots that are thus forced should be dug up in spring, thrown away, and replaced by young ones.

All Unfertile.

A Novice.—The birds were paired up much too early for you to get young birds in February. The fact that all the eggs laid since then have been unfertile is proof that the cocks, if not the hens, are out of condition, though whether it was the early breeding I would not venture to say—it might have been. Although you speak of the trouble to get medicine for them, you do not say what you have been giving. Anyway, try following treatment, and give nothing but what is mentioned here in the way of food or medicine, and you may get a fertile round yet. For staple diet give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape. Twice a week give a teaspoonful of hemp to each pair, and every second day a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, well mixing with it five drops of cod liver oil emulsion. Give two small young leaves of dandelion and a spray of chickweed to each pair daily. In the drinking water for one day only give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of glycerine. After this give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days during the first week give four drops of tincture of steel. Of course, you will stop giving sponge cake as soon as the hen has gone to nest.

Disappointing Scots.

"Fife."—One cause of your disappointment is that the feeding is faulty. The No. 1 Scotch Fancy ben is probably troubled with insects—grey lice, or red-mite; but the former is the most probable—to account for her plucking out her feathers. Carefully examine the bird and cage for these pests, and if any are found thoroughly clean and disinfect the bird and cage to eradicate them. Hold the bird in your hand a few moments, and if she is much troubled with grey lice you will doubtless soon find some running about your hand. Give the bird a daily bath, and add a few drops of essence of quassia to it two or three times a week. If no insects are found still give the baths, but add also as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, the same quantity of chlorate of potash, and ten drops of glycerine to the drinking water every second day for a week. Discontinue the seed mixture you are giving altogether, as this is one cause of your troubles. As a substitute give a teaspoonful of dry rape every second day to each pair, twice a week a teaspoonful of hemp, and a small teaspoonful of egg-food every second day. If the hens are backward at nesting add to the egg-food a few grains of inga every second day, and a pinch of gold of pleasure on the alternate days. Give only chickweed or tender young flowering tops of groundsel for green-food, and some of this daily. Treat hen No. 2 the same as the above, and also the cocks, and the eggs should be more fertile next time. It is, however, getting late now to treat the birds and get them ready to start nesting again, especially when this hen has already had three nests.

A Tall Order.

"One in a Fix."—Your fears that you were giving me a rather tall order were well founded. How many hard-worked and busy, but yet enthusiastic, fanciers would welcome a recipe for making an egg cake which would be rather soft, and keep moist, and could be cut into slices and given to the birds without crumbling, and could also be combined with colour food. Frankly, I do not know of such an ideal substitute for egg-food. Although I do not aspire to great culinary knowledge I imagine the virtue of remaining soft and moist in a cake is largely dependent upon the fat it contains, and any great quantity of fat is to be avoided in cakes for feeding birds upon regularly. The following will perhaps most fully meet your requirements. Get the head of your culinary department to make a cake with these ingredients: three eggs, half-pound of flour, one ounce of soft moist sugar, one ounce of beef dripping, and about as much carbonate of soda as will cover a sixpence. If any additional moisture is needed to make these into a dough, add a little milk. Bake in a moderate oven. If it does not cut very well without crumbling, cut off sufficient for use each day, and crush into crumbs to give in the egg-drawers. To combine colour food with the cake well mix three or four ounces of sweet tasteless red pepper with the flour before starting to mix the dough, and then proceed as above.

Advice on Breeding.

A. Heron.—Am not quite clear as to whether your hens have already had two or three nests. If it is three, you would probably not have any better success by trying again, as the season is now getting late. If they have had only two nests each, and are ready to go to nest again at once, let them do so, and see how they succeed under the following treatment. First of all, see that no direct draught gets into the cages from the window, but give them ample fresh air and ventilation nevertheless. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. Give in addition a teaspoonful of hemp twice a week, and every second day, until the hens have gone to nest, a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake; or egg-food may be given instead if you prefer it, though the sponge cake is a very good substitute when there are no young to rear. Each time you give this well mix with it two drops of cod liver oil emulsion and three of chemical food. Discontinue as soon as the hens go to nest. Give a few sprays of chickweed daily, and a small leaf of dandelion, and every second day for a week add four drops of tincture of steel to the drinking water. When the hens begin to sit feed on Canary seed only, and follow the same advice as given last week until young are reared.

Substitute for Egg.

G. Retsel.—The sample of powder appears very nice, but whether a safe and efficient substitute for egg for rearing young I should not like to say without having some practical knowledge of it. Its value as a perfect substitute for eggs depends upon the proportion of egg used in its manufacture, which should be fairly high, and the quantity of butter, which should be proportionately low. Too much fat is apt to disagree with the birds, and in cakes of this kind I prefer beef dripping to butter. A pinch of plain carbonate of soda is also to be preferred before baking powder. When these points are duly observed much will depend upon how the old birds take to it. If they are fond of it, and eat it freely there is the probability they will also feed with it. The sample you sent is powdered much more finely than birds care to have their soft food. They prefer something more substantial to pick up, especially when they have young, and the finely-powdered portion of the soft food will always be rejected in favour of that which is in grains that are easily picked up. I should certainly add a few drops of water to the food, and mix it with a table fork until in small grains both for feeding old and young. This last answers the second part of query.

Tiny Eggs and Few Young.

W. H. Baker.—The laying of these tiny eggs is due to an unhealthy condition of the ovaries. Such cases are uncommon, but, of course, not unknown, and similar cases occur among our wild birds; this is proved by the fact that I now possess an egg of the common House Sparrow which is rather smaller than the egg you sent. This latter was still more remarkable in being one of a clutch of four, which ranged from abnormally small to abnormally large—the largest egg being nearly double the normal size, and also deformed—with not a single normal egg in the clutch. Hens such as yours are useless for breeding. The best thing you can do is to turn her into a good large flight or aviary and let her have a thorough rest from breeding, with plenty of good plain feeding, unlimited green-food, and opportunities for exercise, until next spring, when you might give her another trial, and if she again lays these freak eggs discard her permanently. Perhaps you overtaxed her a little last year, which would help to bring about her present condition. But even in that case the above treatment is the best you can adopt. For green-food give chickweed and shepherd's-purse liberally. You must not expect to repeat your last year's performance every year. Most fanciers would like to do half as well regularly.

Gone off Song.

Mountain Roll.—It is not at all unlikely that your Roller has simply gone off song in preparation for an early moult. There is not much wrong with your treatment, except that you give far too much egg-food and bread and milk for a bird that is only kept for singing. If it is the moult coming on, you will probably be made aware of it by finding some of the long wing and tail feathers dropped out by the time this reply appears; in that case, you need trouble no further about treatment than giving a small pinch of maw seed every second day, and adding fifteen drops of chemical food to the water twice a week. You would, however, do well to curtail the soft food you give, and limit it to a small teaspoonful of egg-food twice a week, with no bread and milk, or any other kind of soft food. Should you find the bird is not about to moult, continue present seed diet. Give half a teaspoonful of hemp twice a week, and three times a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and five of tincture of gentian two days in every three for a week, and the next week four drops of tincture of steel every second day. Give a spray or two of chickweed, or a dandelion leaf, daily. I presume you keep the cage floor strewn with gritty sand.

Young Birds Dying.

G. Doar.—Although I think your system of feeding is probably at the root of all your trouble, I would strongly advise you to get, as a precautionary measure, a post-mortem made on the body of the next bird that dies in order to discover whether septic fever is the cause of the deaths. Some of the symptoms point directly in this way, so the sooner you know the real fact the better you will be able to cope with it. Meantime, introduce no fresh birds, and exercise the most rigid system of disinfection and cleanliness. For a general system of treatment give a staple diet of Canary seed only, and in addition give separately a half teaspoonful of hemp twice a week. This may be slightly cracked whilst the birds are too young to crack it altogether for themselves; but do not crush and smash it. Twice a week give a similar quantity of rape. This may be given soaked or scalded for the first month and afterwards given dry. Three times a week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake per bird. Give all these extras on different days, and something different each day, so that what is mentioned above will go over a whole week and allow a different item to be given each day. Give a small spray of chickweed each day, or you may vary this with half ripe plantain stalks, or seed stalks of shepherd's-purse. In each ounce of drinking water for two days give ten drops of glycerine, as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece, and two drops of tincture of gentian.

Roller not Rolling.

H. Baker.—You must first of all satisfy yourself whether the bird is exposed to any draughts or is troubled with red-mites, and remove either of these causes if present. I suspect the former; or else a greatly varying temperature is an exciting cause of the bird casting feathers so long. The following treatment will soon put it right: Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately half a teaspoonful of hemp twice a week, and three times a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with five drops of sherry well mixed in it. In the drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight, and on intervening days four drops of tincture of steel. Give a spray or two of chickweed daily, and, of course, see it has gritty sand in its cage.

Erratic Movements.

No Name.—In such a case as yours it is very important to know how the bird is fed, and you do not say a word on the point. Try following treatment for a fortnight, and if not successful by that time write again, and give particulars. Catch the bird, put a drop of warm olive oil on vent, holding the bird still for a few moments whilst the oil is absorbed. Repeat this two or three times in the first week when the abdomen seems packed. In the drinking water give every second day for a week fifteen drops of whiskey, one drop of eucalyptus oil, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and during the next week five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. Give a little chickweed daily.

Seed Samples.

A. G. Marshall.—Both the submitted samples of Canary are very fair. No. 1 is clean and bright, and of excellent quality, but is rather small. No. 2 also nice, clean, and sweet, but the grains vary much in size, some being very large and others very small. It is also slightly inferior in flavour to No. 1, although very good. I should prefer No. 1, but there is no practical difference. The hemp is decidedly poor in quality, very dusty, and contains a rather large proportion of broken, damaged, and unripe grains.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Cage for Blackcap.

R. L.—A box cage, 16 by 12 by 6½ is not unsuitable for a Blackcap, though a width of 8 or 9 ins. would be much better. You would have to put food and water inside in earthenware or glass vessels. The inside woodwork should be a very pale green or blue.

Nest with Seven Young.

A. S. A.—It is a Whinchat's nest, and the young can be reared on the food advised "W. N. J." and "A. T. B.," in issue for June 13. The food you name is not good (rich) enough to keep them on; it is suitable for coarser-feeding birds. The Whinchat has a pretty little song; one I have now sings freely. If you choose the most forward and best coloured youngster, you are quite likely to hit on a male. Unless you are prepared to give your Whinchat a high quality food, and a good supply of live food, he is unlikely to live long; it is a delicate species.

Buttons and Body Colour.

Hardbill.—I lay no stress on the "buttons" of a Goldie in field plumage, for these generally moult out quite distinct enough in a cage. Body colour is different. A young Finch can generally be depended on to deepen in "tanning"; but a poor coloured adult bird can never hope to be moulted to equal an adult good in chestnut. I like a jonque as the bird to moult out for show.

Is it Natural?

J. A. J. Tranmere.—Yes, sir, it is quite natural for a Linnet to have no feathers growing on its stomach. You are evidently under the impression that a bird's feathers grow uniformly all over its body. But they do not; they grow in well-defined tracts, and branch out (so to speak) to cover the whole of the body. If you spend much time "blowing him up," you'll probably in the end be under the painful necessity of "laying him out." Take good advice; let well alone.

Feeding an Owl.

W. Loxham.—Pleased to know you find our paper so useful. The only food an Owl will thrive on is flesh-food. If you cannot provide it, then let the bird have its liberty. As regards a "cheap food," well, mice and sparrows (young ones especially) are plentiful and cheap enough; "black-beetles," too, are good, and generally easily obtainable. Fowl's "innards" and the like are highly appreciated, while Rabbit-flesh is very good.

Canaries Rearing Goldfinches.

H. P.—Hen Canaries will rear young Goldfinches on the foods usually supplied, viz., egg-bread, canary, rape, and hemp seeds, and seeding chickweed, and shepherd's purse, or a little lettuce and watercress. If they can be got to eat small mealworms (or cut up ones), and ants' eggs (especially live eggs), it is an advantage. It is best to let them sit on the Goldfinch eggs. It would be decidedly risky to put young Goldies under a hen without young of her own. If the hen Canary had young about the same age as the young Goldies (up to 5 or 6 days, say), the change might be accomplished. I prefer to "change about" at night.

About a Blackbird.

Blackbird.—Taking everything into consideration, I should advise you to get an adult caught bird. Probably you can get one already steadied down; if not, well a Blackie is far from difficult to get used to caged life and its owner. A hand-reared Blackbird will not sing the pure wild song of its kind, unless it is trained under a free-singing adult bird. Further, a hand-reared bird mixed with other songsters will pick up their notes; such a one would be certain, for instance, to mimic your Thrush. I agree with you that the flute-like strains of the Blackbird are quite good enough "pure and unadulterated." You can certainly have replies to an advertisement sent to a number, care of this office, there being no extra charge beyond the stamp necessary for the forwarding of the replies. Meal-worms, for use, need only be kept in a tin containing enough bran to cover them.

Nightingale with Sore Feet.

W. Reet. — Many softbills are liable to be troubled with sore feet, or swollen toes, especially if the feet, or the perches, are allowed to get clogged with dirt. The latter should never happen. Have personally tried probably everything for the cage-bottoms, and am now using a mixture of fine sand (sifted bird sand; the gritty part I use for my hardhills), and coarse-cut pine sawdust, which I find equal to anything, and better than most things. The cause (apart from dirt) is obscure. But I am very free from it myself, and attribute this to a free and regular use of vegetable ingredients in the stock food, and the occasional use of a mild saline (sulphate of soda) in the drinking water. A very good treatment is to steep the foot for a few minutes in water just comfortably hot, then very gently "massage" the place with finger and thumb well "greased" with Zambuk. In cases of old, hard swellings, I have used with considerable success a little lard with which some tincture of iodine has been incorporated.

Jackdaw's Poor Plumage.

John.—Your stock food, John, is not good enough for so coarse-feeding a bird as a Jackdaw, although supplementing it with table-scraps is correct enough. "Bread and milk" is alright for "sucklings and babes," but is enough to give Jack dyspepsia and worse. You would do far better to give him crushed dog biscuits scalded with hot water; indeed, this, with some vegetables and meat from the table, would make up a not at all bad menu. Or instead of dog biscuit you could use such a food as Clarke's "Melox," or Spratt's game-meal (without grit). If you feed him better, he will, I feel sure, reproduce his plumage properly at the next moult. I presume you keep him in a large enough cage, and afford him proper facilities for taking a bath regularly. When he commences to cast his feathers, colour his drinking water daily with Parrish's Chemical Food (about a teaspoonful to three tablespoonfuls), using a glass or pot vessel only. But you must endeavour to provide him with a stock food of a more substantial nature than bread and milk.

A Trio.

Stocker.—1: To sex Blackcaps (the Warbler of that name) is dead easy, as the Yankees say. The adult male has a dense black cap, whereas the cap of the female is a light brown (rust colour). 2: You can't sex Song Thrushes (and especially young birds) accurately except by hearing them sing. If your young birds commence to "record" (try over their notes) freely, their throats bubbling and working like the bellows of a concertina, so to speak, then you can reckon with some certainty that you have cocks. The young hens will "record," too, though, but never with the persistency and vigour of young males. 3: Linnets and Goldfinches are trained to sing at a given time (say when they are to be "hung on the nail," to drop into singing parlance), by being kept in the dark, generally in a cupboard, or in a black cloth, being taken out and "hung" at about the time the contest is due to start. A properly trained and "sprung" or "fierce" bird (i.e., one got into stout song), will open out at once, especially when he hears a strange bird of his own kind "talking" to him. Training contest singing Linnets and Goldfinches is an art only to be acquired through years of practical experience.

Bullfinch Ailing.

C. J. Andrews.—1. You should cage this bird up by itself. Crush a chlorate of potash lozenge and mix it with twice the quantity of Epsom salts. For one day dissolve as much of this mixture as will just cover a shilling in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. The next day give as much as covers a sixpence; give another dose like this after a day's interval on plain water. Use a glass or pot vessel. Let the bird have plenty of maw seed, and sound teazle to eat; don't give any hemp, niger, or linseed, but a few cracked sunflower seeds now and again will do no harm. He should also have plenty of ripe seeding chickweed, shepherd's purse and groundsel (not the old coarse leaves, but the seeding heads). You could, too, try him with a few small mealworms.

Thrushes Breeding in a Cage.

Manchester.—Judging from the particulars given in your letter, you certainly seem to be well on the road to success—indeed, I see no reason, assuming the eggs are really fertile, why you should not meet with complete success. I have known of Song Thrushes being bred in an aviary, and Blackbirds, too. But never before have I met with—or heard of—such a case as your own. Your letter will no doubt find a place in our correspondence columns. I think with some confidence that the hen will rear the brood on the insectivorous food you are now giving the couple. It should be a good (not cheap) brand. In addition (this is highly important) you must let her have all the live-food you possibly can—a brood of hungry young Thrushes will be likely to consume an astonishing amount. Four kinds you ought to be able to get easily, viz., well-scoured gentles, mealworms, "black-beetles," and small garden worms. If the birds were mine, I should also stir live ants' eggs as liberally as I could amongst the stock food. I hope you will let our readers know the finish to this interesting attempt of Thrushes to reproduce their kind in an ordinary double breeding cage.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

What Parrakeet?

W.H.B.—It is the Yellow-rumped Parrakeet, a native of Australia, and a hardy species if protected from draught. Diet: Canary, white millet, wheat, dari, hemp, and sunflower seeds—well mix and keep a constant supply in the cage—half the bulk of the mixture to be Canary and millet seed, the other kinds in equal parts. It will also require green-food (say, lettuce, grass in flower, etc.), ripe fruit, cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing. I believe it possible for nearly every species of Parrakeet to talk, but there are many that do not, and though I've heard of talking Rosellas, Yellow-rumps, etc., I have never personally come across such. However, if it becomes very tame, and is kept where it will hear plenty of conversation, it may possibly speak a word or two. This and similar species are mostly kept in outdoor aviaries for breeding purposes, and have small chance of learning to talk there.

Outdoor Aviary Queries.

F. Leonhardt.—The convolvulus I should not care to keep inside my aviary to any extent, though I have had it climb in through the wires. At the same time, I do not know of its being actually poisonous to birds. It has never bloomed in my aviary, though the foliage has been eaten without any ill effect. There are so many safe decorative plants for aviaries that I should be inclined to root it out, or partially so, at any rate. Elder, wild clematis, red and black currants, box, holly, privet, Virginian creeper, ivy, wild rose, and such like are absolutely safe, and should soon grow and spread if the aviary be not overcrowded. Doubtful plants are best out of the way, and I class the convolvulus as such. So far as I can gather, I believe the symptom you name to be a sexual one, and not a disease. Most certainly, if it continues, and the bird is otherwise apparently well, you can take it that such is the case. Unless your shelter shed is very draughty, which (I take it) is not the case, you can dismiss all thought of its being ague, or similar trouble. Where their accommodation is rain and draught proof such will not trouble birds kept out of doors.

Feather-plucking Cockatoo.

D.M.B.—Give the bird several doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, with several days' interval between them, so long as its voidings do not become watery loose; quantity, one teaspoonful in the drinking water. Soak the bare parts say every other day, or even daily this weather, with quassia solution; this will make its plumage bitter and distasteful, but you must protect against draught till it is dry. Get the following mixture: two parts Canary seed and oats, and one part each wheat, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seed; well mix and let this form the staple diet. Give green food liberally, such as it fancies (say lettuce, green peas, cabbage, carrot, etc., according to season); also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuit, little boiled potato (without grease of any kind), and nuts, and keep up regular supplies of grit, cuttlefish, and water. Recovery in such a case can never be other than slow, and you must persevere with the treatment. Some birds never give up the vice of feather plucking once it is acquired. Keep it occupied, and supply it with cotton reels, rotton wood, etc., to chew up and play with.

Blue-fronted Amazon.

Taggs.—It is a young bird, and it is impossible to tell its sex. It may possibly improve in colour after each moult. Nearly all species of Parrots are notoriously slow in maturing, some species being several years before they enjoy the splendour of fully mature plumage. Once the birds are fully adult, the male is usually the slightly larger bird, richer in hue (but this is very unreliable, as the species as a whole is very variable in the colour areas of its plumage), and his beak is narrower and the culmen more arched than that of the female. Stop for a time trying to teach it one word, greet it at different times with "Good morning," "Halloa," "How do," and such like; also keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation and get company without being scared, and it will undoubtedly begin to talk at no distant date. My experience teaches me that sex has very little to do with talking capacity; individual birds of both sexes vary much in this respect.

Budgerigars in Poor Plumage.

"Petland."—(1) Am of opinion red-mite is responsible for the trouble; put birds in another cage, and thoroughly paint their present cage inside and out with neat paraffin, letting it remain out of doors for 24 hours. Thoroughly swill with clear water, and distemper with a washable distemper. When it is dry the birds can be returned. (2) From spring onwards, but Budgerigars readily mate among one another without trouble, providing the sexes are equal. (3) When adult, and in breeding condition, males have the cere over nostrils bright blue, that of the female being ruddy brown. Send to the Editor for the new handbook on Budgerigars and Cockatiels, 6d., post free.

Breeding of Budgerigars.

Algbrugh.—It is very probable that during the heat of the day your aviary gets very hot, and this frequently causes birds to lose their feathers. Try putting Parrish's Chemical Food in their drinking water for a month or longer. If there should be any signs of constipation, making the drinking water just saline with Epsom salts will soon put this right. Occasionally you get eggs laid on the floor, no matter how well regulated the aviary is, evidently out of sheer awkwardness, for I know no other reason except, of course, where the aviary is infested with mice. As regards the young, I cannot give you any definite age; by observation you must find out when they are feeding themselves, and then with an aviary of your size they should be removed. I certainly advise you to get the handbook on "Budgerigars," 6d., post free, from the Editor.

Young Grey and Water.

Silverdale.—Let the bird have a tablespoonful of water two or four times a day, and after a time the water can be left in its cage without it overdrinking. As it is a young bird, it would be a help to make the water the colour of pale port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food. A newly-imported bird would probably make itself ill, owing to its having had little or no water for some period, if a restriction were not put upon it. But when it has been gradually accustomed to it, it should be, at any rate, permitted to satisfy its thirst at least twice a day. It is not wholesome for a bird to feed exclusively on hemp or sunflower seeds; if it picks out the hemp, do not give a fresh supply till the remainder is eaten—that is, of course, providing it has not been fouled. Well clean the husks and dust from it, and only add a little fresh from time to time, and thus force it to eat the varied mixture. I take it you are also giving ripe fruit, plain biscuit and nuts; if not, it will be well to do so.

Feather-eating Grey.

J.F.—After a bird has been confirmed in this vice for a year, I fear there is but small chance of an entire cure. Give several doses of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful) in drinking water, with a couple of days between each. Of course, if its voidings become watery loose the aperient must be stopped for a time. On the days you are not giving the aperient, well colour drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. While the warm weather lasts bathe it almost daily with quassia solution, carefully guarding against draught till dry. If there should be any sores, lightly touch same with spermaceti ointment. Keep him supplied with cotton reels, and a piece of non-splintery wood, to chew up and play with. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, or any kind of animal food whatever. Diet: Seed mixture, two parts Canary seed and oats, and one part each wheat, maize, dari, and hemp; well mix and keep a supply continuously in its cage. Supply also at intervals, so as to vary the diet, ripe fruit, green-food (lettuce, etc.), plain biscuit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), and keep up continuous supplies of cuttlefish and grit. Confine yourself to above diet; it will give an ample range. The only exception is, that if you have been giving your maize boiled you must still give a little, but wean it from this as soon as possible. Recovery cannot be quick, but if you persevere with above treatment there is a probability that by the time it is through the next moult it will possibly leave its plumage alone. Hope such will be the case.

What Bird?

W.S.B.—You do not, unfortunately, give me any idea of size or shape, but if as large as common house Sparrows they are Grey Java Sparrows. If from their size you know above to be incorrect, please repeat query in full next week, and compare their size with some bird well known to you, and also please convey some idea as to whether they are slenderly or stoutly built; comparison here, again, would be a help. If Java Sparrows, Canary, white and spray millets, oats, green-food, grit, cuttlefish, and water will suffice to keep it in health and condition.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Goldfinch-Canary Mule (F.B.C.).—The bird died of septicæmia or blood poisoning, and in all probability your other losses arose from the same infectious disease. You must disinfect your room and cages with fumigation of sulphur.

Pigeon and Dove Pairing.

F. E.—Your question with regard to cock Pigeon and hen Dove pairing and producing young is in order in this section, and Doves, at all events, are cage birds. The cross is not uncommon; I have seen several specimens, mostly resembling Pigeons in colour, though in form there is much likeness to the Dove. These hybrids are almost always barren, but a French experimenter, Mr. A. Suchetel, got one to breed again with a hen dove. This three-quarter-bred, however, was itself barren, but the fact of its being produced at all shows us that we should be careful not to assume that usually barren hybrids can never possibly produce young.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

A Poetical Lament (W. Lovatt).—We are very fond of poetry ourselves, but unfortunately our printers are not. They wax exceeding wrath if we send any round to them, therefore we are afraid your verses will have to rest content with the appreciation of the office staff, to whom the office boy has promised to declaim them during the blessed hour of lunch. We agree with you that the only way is the way which (vide the poem) "in my mind has just now popped."

Birds in Africa (T. Smith).—We shall be pleased to receive a few notes from you, and thank you for your kindly remarks.

Cutting (T. Herbert).—Accept our thanks.

Colour-Feeding Yorkshire Greens (A Novice).—This is a very wide subject, and not to be dealt with in a paragraph. You should read the special articles on this breed, by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, which appeared in our columns. The numbers containing them can be sent you post free for ninepence. In "House's Canary Manual" (post free, 1s. 2d.) and "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (post free, 7d.) the process of colour-feeding is also explained at length.

An Exchange (P. Lawson).—You certainly did wrong by sending on your stamps to a party absolutely unknown to you. It is regrettable that you should be unable to obtain any redress, but if the police cannot trace the parties, we, of course, cannot hope to help you. We will, however, make enquiries. You could have sent the stamps to us to hold pending the satisfactory completion of the exchange.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SO-CALLED "SWEATING" HENS.

SIR,—Probably Mr. J. Cutmore, taxidermist to the Liverpool Museum, may be able to help your correspondent, Mr. Clegg by throwing some further light on the subject of "sweating" (so-called) hens. He stated some time since (vide report of his lecture) that birds are physiologically unable to sweat. It would be pedantic on my part to question such an authoritative statement, but I must frankly admit I am in a quandary when I see the breast feathers of hens presenting the appearance of "sweating," even while incubation of the eggs is proceeding. Surely this cannot be owing to the respiration of the embryo?

R. L. CRISP.

BIRD CATCHING.

SIR,—In reply to "Welshman"; to set trap, turn the loose hoop (as marked on the drawing which I gave recently) back on to the fast hoop—that part with the small crowbar and which doesn't move, being pegged to the ground with iron pegs this shape ⊓ Having turned the loose hoop back, pull the clasp wire over it and lift the bait up till the loop on the baiting wire comes over the end of the clasp; set it as firmly as possible. A bird picking at the bait knocks it down and that releases the clasp wire and frees the loose hoop which comes over like a flash. I have caught hundreds of birds of all kinds in this way, but have never known the trap either to miss or hurt a bird. The traps want setting so that the bait can be blown off by one's breath. On windy days put them on a shady side of the hedge. The drawing, of course, depicts the trap as it appears when left flat on the ground. In reply to "A Lover of British Birds," I may say that when I have caught a batch of birds, I turn them into loose rooms, having the windows netted over, and give them ordinary mixed seed, or charlock, which is quite as good for Linnets. I give teazle for the Goldies. Bullies will soon sort out the hemp; in fact, almost all seedeaters are fond of hemp. In addition you can give the Bullies in spring hedge buds, in the autumn sour dock-seed and in winter privet berries Goldies in the spring may have seeding groundsel and chickweed, in the autumn hardheads and in the winter thistle-heads. So, too, Linnets in the spring may have chickweed, groundsel and various downy seeds, and in autumn and winter charlock, etc.

THRUSHES BREED IN A CAGE.

SIR,—I am under the impression that I have read in your valuable paper, that it is about impossible to get Thrushes to breed in cages. I write you to say that my pair of Thrushes are paired up in a double Canary-breeding cage and that the hen has been sitting on a clutch of her own eggs, duly laid in the nest since June the 6th, and every egg appears to be fertile. She allows me to feed her with mealworms while she sits on the eggs, so I have good hopes of her "doing the trick."

MANCHESTER.

SKYLARKS BRED IN AN OUTDOOR AVIARY.

SIR,—Some of your readers will possibly be interested to know that I have this summer been fortunate in breeding young Skylarks in my aviary. Last spring I bought a pair of hand-reared birds and placed them with a few Canaries and a couple of Pipits in an outdoor avairy 15 by 6 by 6 ft., built against a wall. The Skylarks built their nest amongst some piled-up rockery and in the midst of a grass tussock. Though the cock bird is wild and shy of approach, the hen sits close and will come up to be fed. One egg hatched out this morning, and as I am unaware of a precedent case, I am interested greatly to see how the male birds will rear their young. I shall supply them with plenty of mealworms, grubs, and egg-food. It is an interesting fact, that I have paid little or no attention to my birds beyond ordinary daily feeding.

STANLEY HARRISON.

YOUNG FEEDING THE YOUNG.

SIR,—Mr. G. Hayward, writing on "Young Feeding the Young,' is correct. Some years ago, before your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, was started, I had a pair of Norwich Canaries, which had five young ones, and brought them up fine. They left the nest in due time and the old birds began to build again. The young ones got troublesome, so I put them in the part of the cage made specially for young birds. The cock bird fed them through the wires. There being five of them and the oldest one stronger than the last-hatched, it followed that this one had the advantage over the others. One day the old bird had fed the young ones, and directly afterwards, the oldest of the nest turned round and fed the youngest. This practice it followed up on several occasions. Being nearly always at home, I had a fine chance of watching my birds. The pair of Greenfinches added another young one to their four and all five are doing fine, and are a week old. The cock bird feeds as well as the hen, and it is a treat to see them.

C. OSBORN.

THE SCOTCH FANCY v. THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD.

SIR,—Re "Auld Reekie's" letter on the progress of the Scotch Fancy Canary. I think Norwich fanciers in general have much reason to object to the statement that in his opinion a right good pair of Scotch Fancies are worth a dozen pair of Norwich Fancies. I, personally, and for the sake of the Norwich Fancy, should be very much obliged if he will endeavour through your correspondence column to prove his opinion; I think it is due to the Norwich Fancy, and should be edifying reading. I find it a very common feeling among Scotch Fancy men that their bird is by far superior to any other member of the Canary tribe, and I cannot fathom by what method of calculation they come to this result. "Auld Reekie" has, for instance, a remark about the selling price more than repaying the initial outlay. But while he is looking on the business side of his hobby, he should remember that this price of £100 for a pair has been beaten altogether on at least one occasion for another class of Canary, and I daresay there are other occasions when it has been equalled, if not surpassed. Turning to another side of the hobby, exhibition points: The Norwich Plainheads have here two points that the Scotch Fancy men never consider; these are colour and quality of feather. They have also point for point in every other way. So far as the make and shape of a Scotch Fancy are concerned, well, I reckon that is for each man's own taste; and if I (as I do) think the Norwich the nicer bird of the two, then that is the bird for me. But I would be very foolish to say in a letter to the Fancy Press, that it was worth a dozen of any other class of Canary. "Auld Reekie" can, however, retrieve the position if he will endeavour to vindicate his opinion; and I trust he will, as it will give Norwich men an opportunity of defending their Fancy.

CUCKOO'S STRANGE FOSTER PARENTS.

SIR,—I know of a young Cuckoo in a Greenfinch's nest. I have never seen one in a seed-eating bird's nest before, so thought I would write to you about it. It may interest some of the many readers of CAGE BIRDS, and at the same time I should like to know in return if any of them have ever found a young Cuckoo in the nest of any other seed-eating bird besides the Greenfinch.

WILLIAM BELL.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE GREENFINCH.

SIR,—In your last issue Mr. C. Osborne stated he was breeding from a pair of Greenfinches; I should be glad if he would let me know through the medium of your paper whether the Greenies are breeding in an ordinary breeding-cage or not, and also whether the rearing of the young is entrusted to the Finches or to a Canary foster-mother? I am very interested in these birds, and am at the present time hand-rearing quite successfully a nest of four. They are now a month old, and fly about the room. The mode of rearing them has been entirely in accordance with that recorded in your most interesting and instructive paper. I wish CAGE BIRDS the success it deserves.

LILY BUTLER.

CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL.

SIR,—I have just seen the 1908 ANNUAL, published by CAGE BIRDS, and I must say that every novice ought to have one, while the "old hands" must find it very useful. It truly is a complete guide for keepers of birds; still, everyone must take CAGE BIRDS to see how the bird world "wags its tail" weekly. Mule-breeders and exhibitors in particular should have an ANNUAL to see the splendid coloured plate of the Bramblefinch-Chaffinch Hybrid. The article on "Diseases of Cage Birds" is indeed worth more than the price of work, and the "Glossary of Terms" should be studied by every novice, old fancier, and young judge. (I am, personally, only well acquainted with one term, "Hard Up"!) I think it is a great pity the word "jonque" should be called obsolete. It is derived from the old-English flower, the Jonquil, a beautiful yellow flower, and there are no other colours of this plant. I also think that mealy is a far better term to use than buff. Many breeders of common Canaries think that buff is a drab colour, and call all Cinnamons buffs.

J. H. VERRALL.

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Clegg's first question, I might say that I live two or three score miles due west of him. He says he can't get dandelion from the open fields before the end of April. Now, who would think that the salubrious climate of England varied so much in places a hundred or less miles apart? Here we have one place where we can't got dandelion till the end of April, while the writer can get it early in March, and yet another gentleman can get a barrow-load in any day of the year. When will our education be complete? I am well aware how Greenfinches feed their young. I happen to possess hen Greenies that will feed their young while I am close beside the nest. So I ought to know whether they feed from the crop or not. Mr. Clegg says "he has watched nests of young of various species, and he has never seen a dandelion head carried to the nest." I haven't either; and I am afraid Mr. Clegg will live a long time before he does. But you never can tell in these days of enlightenment. Mr. Clegg wants to know "what the other seeds are at that time of year!" If he will read my letter again he will find that I said that dandelion heads were almost the sole food for the first nest, and that they fed on insects and on other wild seeds for the later nests. I think dandelion seed almost the only seed to be found during May, except, perhaps, chickweed and groundsel. Mr. Clegg says he can nearly reach dandelion out of bed. I generally do get mine out of bed.

"TEMPUS OMNIA REVELAT."

SIR,—I readily accept the correction of your correspondent B. H. Clegg about the quantity of dandelion to be gathered every day in the year. The remark was "a figure of speech" only by the omission of the words "during the season of growth," which were inadvertently left out by me. Still, I thought that the veriest townsman would know that neither dandelion, nor even grass, grew every day in the year. As "T. O. R." says, much would depend upon the size of the barrow. Very well; now things are in full growth I have not the slightest doubt but that I could quite safely go farther and say that "T. O.R." would find no difficulty in filling half a dozen of the biggest he cared to push about on the radius I mentioned before. More than this, if one took the trouble to look for it in cosy sheltered places as B. H. Clegg suggests, there is probably not a week in the year, except when the ground is ice-bound or covered with frozen snow, when it could not be found. Again, "T. O. R." must not jump to the conclusion that I am not a believer in dandelion. As a matter of fact, I am a great believer in it. But it must be used with discretion, and not indiscriminately all the year round. "A. Mather" also seems to have jumped to a wrong conclusion. My remark that some critics (they have been good enough to write and tell me themselves) had learnt that "there was 'summat in it,'" meant that there was some ground for the objection. I repeat I do not profess to possess any technical knowledge as to how dandelion affects a bird's system, but when I could, as I did when I made experiments, systematically produce a certain ill-effect upon birds, not once, but time after time, and found the same trouble disappear as often as the dandelion was withdrawn, my commonsense told me that the dandelion was at the root of the trouble. How, or by what means I do not profess to know. Later on I may return to this subject at a more opportune time. I very rarely use watercress at all. I prefer chickweed and groundsel.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

SIR,—I see the views of fanciers on the use of dandelion as a green-food vary very much. Well, I suppose it comes about by the general treatment of the birds. I may say I have given it to my birds like feeding so many rabbits, and that I have been very successful, having bred over 100 each year for the past six years. I also give it to my youngsters after they begin to feed themselves, and I don't suppose my loss among them has been one in every 30 during all my years of breeding. Therefore, in spite of all its critics, I contend there is still no better green-food for Canaries than dandelion leaves (young, with smooth edges). My birds get hard-boiled egg, Osborne biscuits, hemp seed, and as much dandelion as they like, when I can get it; but I am sorry to say I can't get it all the year round, by a long way, as from October to April in this part of Lancashire (Bolton) there is none to get.

A HUMAN LINNET.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a little space in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, in praise of Mr. Fred Allen's bird whistling, and to thank him for the fine exhibition of Linnet whistling he gave us at Hull after our Whit Monday contest. His chief notes were chattering and scraping. He imitated one of Mr. Sam Saul's bird so exactly in tone that he actually deceived one of our judges! He is only a young man, therefore it is quite surprising to hear him whistle (and speak of the Linnet) so well. He will take a lot of beating. I hope you will find space for the above to show we acknowledge that Mr. Fred Allen, of Leeds, is a "good 'un."

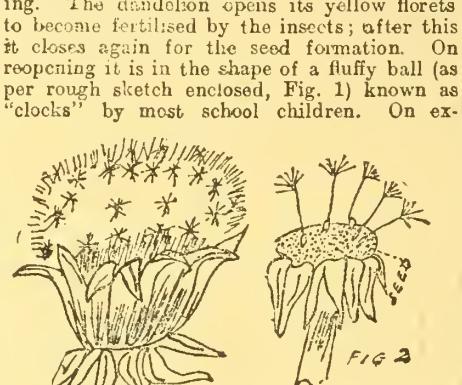
WHERE DOES DANDELION SEED GROW?

SIR,—In answer to your correspondent "Rochdale" I submit the following information. The dandelion seed grows on the flower head after the plant has finished blooming. The dandelion opens its yellow florets to become fertilised by the insects; after this it closes again for the seed formation. On reopening it is in the shape of a fluffy ball (as per rough sketch enclosed, Fig. 1) known as "clocks" by most school children. On examination it will be seen to consist of a number (about 500) of plumed stalks, with a seed attached to the bottom of each. No doubt "Rochdale" has seen these plumed stalks floating about in the air. This is nature's provision for scattering the seed. Fig. 2 shows dandelion head partly "blown"; the seed can be plainly seen. The heads should be gathered just before they have opened to the full extent, and dried in a large paper bag. The seeds will become released and sink to bottom of bag.



T. ALLERTON.

SIR,—If "Rochdale" will gather the flower of the dandelion and look at it very closely, he will find under the flower something like tiny small down. Take another half dead and he will notice the white stuff a lot larger and some young seed under the white. Then pick a white bud and examine it, and he will see nothing but a bud of white stuff. Under that the seed will be found. As the bud opens he will discover the seed gets blacker, and of course ripe, and is blown away by the wind. I am sure this all grows on one stem, and he will see it, too, if he studies this very closely.

A BIRD-LOVER'S EXPERIENCES IN CANADA.

[We are enabled to publish this extract from the letter of a one-time well-known English bird-lover, now resident in Canada, by courtesy of Mr. W. A. Lott. We think its strong human interest will appeal to readers. The writer, Mr. A Jones, was a member of the National British Bird and Mule Club, and is the inventor of "Jones' Hygienic Fountain" for aviaries and flight cages.—EDITOR.]

My Dear Lott,—I have no doubt you hear glowing accounts of Canada in England, and the hundreds of thousands that come out; but they don't say how many go back again to the old country. The Government want all the prairie broken up, and offer you 160 acres to stop on it three years and spend your capital. These are a few of the discomforts you have to go through. The Government say you can find water on the prairie by digging from 12 to 15 feet for it. We have dug from 9 to 12 wells and they have proved all dry. Look at the expense and labour of this! Prairie fires in the spring come along and destroy all your pasture; at times they are 100 miles wide. The last originated from a man on the line raking out hot coals on to the grass. I think the fine the company had to pay was 1,000,000 dollars. Sometimes a fire is started by ranchers; they want new grass for their cattle and horses. They don't think of the sweating we poor beggars have to put it out, working night and day with wet sacks, fighting it to save our premises! The last one came along when nearly everybody was at the fair in town. I was fighting it alone on my quarter. It jumped the fireguard we construct, like a cat, and came on to my "shack." I scrambled up all the inflammable sticks, chips, etc., and threw them off from the shack, and then wired in with my wet sacks. A very strong wind drove it swishing and frizzling past, and I bobbed behind the "shack." Then away I went round the back of it to some stacks, the fire going nearly as fast as I could run. This time I was beaten; one stack caught fire, and I felt very much in despair, like the prophet when he said: "It is enough, O Lord, now take away my life." But the sack was wet, and only the top was burnt that had been dried up by the sun (Providence again). I then went to a neighbour's farm; the occupants were both in town. I sanded some pasture, and then went in his "shack" and had a feed. I felt rather played out. So much for the second discomfort. I take up a cutting from the journal "The Woman at Home," which my sister sent out to me, and I read these words: "I look out upon the rolling Wheatfield of the Canadian North West. The fields are glowing yellow in the sun. The land groans with its precious burden, etc." The precious burden gets frozen or hailed down, and is then anything but precious; or if the writer had been a farmer she would have probably seen acres destroyed by gophers, a kind of ground rat, and some by blight, let alone mice and birds, and at times there are thousands of Blackbirds sitting on the stacks. But we never kill a bird out here; the good they do more than counterbalances the evil. Farmers are getting more intelligent. The writer, too, says nothing about mosquitoes. At times I have had to run; they are like a hornet's nest about your head and hands and every bare part they can get at. Dolly's experience did not reach to this point, I guess! I think I hear you say: Jones, you must be a pessimist to write about all these woes; cheer up, old man. I am all right, and am going to another concert and dance to-morrow night. I shall fight and work on. The singing of birds in the land is coming. I had a flock of Nightingales in April last year. I think the poor things had been driven here by the wind during their migration. I could hardly believe my eyes. I looked out of my window in the early morning and saw hundreds of brown birds. I thought probably some of the Bunting family had arrived; the Song Sparrow, perhaps. I took my field-glasses and hurried out, took a good sight, and got as near as I could. Presently I heard "Cluck," "Cluck." Oh joy of joys, to hear a Nightingale! I told a farmer. "Are you sure?" he asked. Then he drawled out in his dry way: "Nightingales on the prairie you may depend on it they won't stop here long." "No," I said; "poor little beggars, they are hungry or they would not have stopped at all." Sure enough there was not one to be seen the next day. They had a famished look. I scattered oatmeal, etc., about, to hold them on; they might eat it if very hungry. The snow had not all melted, and I expect very few insects had made their appearance. Yes; I have a little pleasure here of nature's providing. I think I told you I had a Goshawk, Carrion Crows and Blackbirds all feeding together upon scraps from the table and gophers I had trapped just outside my shack. A stoat came tearing over the snow the other day and carried off the mice, one by one, which I had trapped. Then it came right inside and tried to carry off the meat! He then caught up a blood-spattered knife in his teeth. But I wanted that myself, so I took it away from the stoat! Some would look upon these tales as made-up lies but you know me, Lott, and I believe the time is coming when there will be more animals domesticated by far than there are now. I have walked within 20 yards of three wolves that were sitting looking at me on the prairie, and have had gophers eating off my plate. Is it not nice to have somethink to break the monotony of money grabbing? I have read about Mr. Starr, the Crystal Palace manager. He is a fine fellow I guess. I am glad the N.B.B. and M.C. is prospering. Make it an educational club. I must now do my washing.

HEN SONG THRUSH BUILDS AND LAYS IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—I think your many readers will be interested to learn that Mr. S. Walker, of Moores Road, Belgrave, Leicester, has a hand-reared Thrush, a hen (of last year) which has built two nests in the coal-house, and laid two clutches of eggs. He took the last lot away, and had three eggs brought him, which he put under the hen. She sits night and day coming off only for her food, which she gets in living kitchen, then goes back to her nest. She had been sitting 12 days when I saw her. Her photograph was taken while on the nest. I have never seen the like before. Mr. Walker told me that almost all the people that work in the factory had been to see her. She will not come off when you stand at the door of the coal-house, which is left open all day long, till night when the family are about to retire. Of course, the hen has one wing cut, and runs about the garden all winter, going into the house for her food, and to roost.

The Feeding & Rearing of Young Canaries

By R. L. CRISP.

A Lecture given before the members and friends of the Lewisham and District C.B.S. on June 12th.

Many fanciers go wrong in the feeding of their Canaries, so I will state my own views and if anything I say is of assistance to anyone, I shall be fully compensated for any trouble taken. With the making of egg-food many fanciers use too much bread or biscuit. For my part I always use biscuit, containing, as it does, in my opinion, much more nourishment and having a lesser tendency to turn sour.

Some short time ago I witnessed an egg-food-making competition and was much amused by seeing one competitor use a piece of bread as large as my doubled-up fist; probably if this gentleman intended to give his birds amusement in hunting for the small pieces of egg, his purpose was a success, but as a food for rearing young Canaries on, it was certainly a case of "love's labour lost." Biscuit contains quite double the amount of building-up properties we find present in bread; it is nourishment in a much more concentrated form.

I use 1½ tea biscuits to 2 eggs, this in my experience being the best proportion, and I obtain much larger and finer specimens than if I used bigger quantities. So I do not use too much biscuit. I do not discard any of the egg at all, the white containing a larger percentage of building-up properties. I do not like the egg-food to be dry as it makes it more difficult for the birds to regurgigate.

Hemp seed and Green-food Examined.

Many fanciers say it is quite impossible to rear birds without hemp-seed, but I say it is possible, as I never use any myself. I strongly advise all fanciers to discard this seed if they find the parents feeding largely on same, as I am convinced it is quite unsuitable for young birds, and in many cases the cause of those long, lean, gaunt young which we see in the nest, but which, with few exceptions, die, and when examined look to be in a half-starved condition.

I prefer maw and rape seeds to any others, both of which I give in moderation, the sleeping property of the poppy not being in the seed but in the pod no harm can therefore accrue from their use. I buy them in small quantities, as I find they have a tendency to turn musty if stored for any length of time.

Green-food, such as chickweed and dandelion, I consider excellent if fresh, and also watercress, which I may say I use freely; in fact, not being able to obtain the other green-food mentioned, I use this solely and have never found any harm accrue from its use, even from the first day of hatching. It is my custom to put a tiny spray in on the first day as this tempts the hen off the nest, and a glimpse can then be obtained of the contents of same. I may here add that I use this right through the moulting season as well, but only in judicious quantities. Green-food of any kind acts as ballast, and is inclined to act on the liver. By carrying food through the system it is beneficial, though it has no building up properties.

Some Nesting Difficulties.

Clear eggs I consider the result of sterility in one or both of the birds, probably caused through excessive inbreeding, or through the birds being out of condition. I am, therefore, no believer in close inbreeding. Addled eggs are the result of a lack of vitality on the part of one or both of the birds, and is mostly caused through lack of stamina.

Desertion is probably caused through the second clutch coming too soon after the first, to allow of the hen sitting her full time so that nature ordains that she should desert her first clutch.

Sweating is mostly caused by the hen sitting too closely. I have been informed on good authority that it is impossible for a hen to sweat and that this sweated appearance is caused by the congealed breath of the closely-covered young; but this I cannot vouch for, as I am luckily not troubled with the complaint in my room. As a preventative I would advise the use of a very shallow nest-pan, or a perforated, zinc-bottomed nest-box, and of chopped hay for nesting materials.

I also prefer the cock to run with two hens, keeping him away till the eggs are incubated and the young at least a day old, as this allows the young to get fresh air when the hen feeds, instead of (as is often done) the cock continuing to feed the hen on the nest. It also prevents maltreatment of the young, if they accidentally fall out, which does sometimes occur; in all probability the cock with the idea, no doubt, of helping to replace them, proceeds to nip off the toes, wings, etc.

It also allows more freedom in selecting a suitable partner for him by trying him with more than one hen. I have no remedy for hens refusing to feed, the cause being sometimes that the young are themselves too weak to gape for food; and it is not always the hen's fault.

Whenever, too, the hen has a desire to nest in the same place, I remove the young to another nook, giving her a clean nest and fresh nesting materials, a piece of rope frayed out being an excellent thing to keep her from plucking her young for this purpose.

Feeding and Training the Young.

When young are taken away I always at first give the egg-food moistened with water until they are quite able to eat the hard seed. I also give small quantities of bread and milk, slightly sprinkling same with rape or maw seeds.

To train the young I always give the show-cage to them immediately they are able to take to the perches, though I do not believe that any amount of training will ever make a show bird, a show bird being bred, not made. The only real training I consider necessary is a thorough familiarity with the show-cage, steadiness being a most essential point in all show birds.

Don't discard all faulty specimens such as birds deficient in head and beak properties, as they may be good in body; but breed same with birds good in these respects. Type and quality are your first consideration, and not size, though, naturally, I prefer a good, big bird, if not coarse, and if also he combines other good points. If, however, you want to do away with any faults, buy one good hen, unless you happen to be good in hens, when of course you will buy a cock; but if you are not good in either sex buy a hen for choice, and the best you can afford, one good bird being worth any number of moderate specimens. Buy from sight and not from pedigree alone, as a bird showing good properties must be bred from selection by the breeder and not from haphazard breeding. I have always proved the wisdom of so doing. Of course, get both if able, but pedigree alone is a pure fallacy, in my opinion.

To produce size combined with good type I have always found that big hens with small cock birds are just as good as the reverse order of things; so do not discard your small cock birds if typical in other respects, but mate them to the largest hens you have. But make sure to get type in both.

Moulting, in my opinion, is a fever which attacks your birds in a more or less virulent form, and should any of your young seem to be badly affected during this most critical period isolate them at once and feed solely on bread and milk— a remedy for which we are indebted to Yorkshiremen. If taken in time fully 90 per cent. of your young will be reared as a reward for this slight extra trouble.

The Discussion.

MR. EDWARDS asked: Can you tell me the best way to steady a bird, as I find mine very difficult to steady, continually clinging to the top of wires?—The best time to steady is directly the young leave the hens. I am no believer in flight cages (I refer, of course, to large flights), as a great deal of plucking ensues. Keep the young in stock cages and well drill by handling.

MR. EDWARDS: Do you consider it best to keep them in stock cages the whole time; and how many would you keep together?—Yes, and two for preference, as this small number prevents fighting and probably much plucking. I believe, too, the birds get a more even quantity of food.

MR. SCOTT: Do you consider it best to keep breeding cocks together?—No, decidedly not. Cocks are always more pugilistic than hens, and at this time would probably half kill one another. Keep them in separate show cages, if possible.—What about during the show season?—By all means keep show birds separately.

MR. PILCHER: Will the full clutch of eggs be fertile if the cock is removed after first egg is laid?—Yes, certainly; in my experience it is so.—How many days before the first egg is laid must he be with the hen to ensure the eggs being fertile if in condition?—The day before is quite safe for third and fourth eggs, but I doubt whether the first and second would be fertile.

MR. PILCHER: Do you believe in letting the cock help to rear the young?—I certainly believe in it after the young are 10 days old, as the cock is as much responsible for the young as the hen is, and like the human father should not be allowed to shirk his responsibilities.

MR. FLETCHER: If you run a cock with three or four hens, do you then allow the cock to help rear the young?—No; but I do not advise having too many hens.

MR. SCOTT: I am much troubled with getting unfertile eggs; what time do you consider the best to run the cock with hen to produce fertile eggs—early morning or later on during the day?—The latter part of the day before the hen takes to the nest, as they usually do previous to nesting.—Will a richer diet improve the fertility of cock?—Yes, slightly, unless very closely inbred; but if not in condition you cannot force same.

MR. ANDERTON: Do all the young have the bad characteristics transmitted to them?—Like does not always produce like, but it has a tendency to do so. Perfect specimens are not bred, so do not discard all specimens with faults; but don't, on the other hand, breed with birds having all of the same faults.

MR. WHITE: What about sight influence?—In his reply Mr. Crisp said he would not expect the sight of a scaffold pole to influence the length of his Yorkshires. (Laughter.)

MR. EDWARDS: In moulting, is it necessary to use egg and biscuit in the same proportion as in rearing?—No, but I prefer the egg-food to be well damped when adding colour-food, as this generates the colour quicker than if too powdery, though, of course, I do not mean stodgy.

MR. ANDERTON: Do you think feeding in any way affects the sex of young?—No, certainly not.

MR. PALLETT: Which do you consider has the most influence in breeding for colour, the cock or the hen?—If there is any advantage, it is on the cock's side, though a good, rich-coloured hen has also a very great influence on the colour. Whatever young are bred, more buffs are bred, however you pair your birds.

MR. ANDERTON: Can you account for my having so many clear eggs; I have had several nests of four eggs each, and only one fertile egg in each?—Only in the condition of your birds, as previously explained.

MR. LUCAS: Do you consider a little salt in the bath beneficial in the case of sweating hens?—Yes, I believe it to be so.

MR. LUCAS: In what way do you consider Canary seed harmful, starch being present in same, and starch forming sugar?—Sugar is only a heat generator and not a food.

MR. LUGG: Do you believe in soaking rape seed?—No, I have no faith in it, though, I believe, many fanciers advise its being done.

MR. LUGG: Have you tried the New Woodland Milk Food?—No, but I should think it quite possible to bring up young on it, being as it is a milk food.

MR. ANDERTON: Do you advise using watercress only to get the best results?—No, chickweed is an excellent green-food, and dandelion also, if used moderately; but fanciers must use discretion in the giving of all green-food.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Crisp for his kindness in giving such an interesting paper, was unanimously passed. Mr. Crisp, in reply, said it gave him much pleasure to come among such enthusiastic fanciers, and he hoped he had been of assistance to some.—H. THOS. LUCAS, hon. sec.

British Birds: Some Practical Hints on their Management.

By W. H. COMMINS.

Notwithstanding the general knowledge and the broader-minded attitude of fanciers which now exist in relation to this particular branch of the Fancy, namely, the keeping of British birds in confinement, it is not unusual to hear people say how easy and simple the keeping of British birds really is. The first study for anyone is to get to know the names, the colours, and the different habits of each bird that comes before him.

First, Know Your Birds.

The greatest difficulty for the young fancier to overcome is to know how to treat the birds rightly and properly in confinement. You must study the different species and endeavour to learn all you can about their natural habits, and the various foods they live upon in their wild state; also ascertain the amount of space each bird will require when caged.

For hard-bills box-cages with wire fronts are the most suitable. When the wire fronts are screwed on they are easily taken off, and the inside of the cage can then soon be cleaned. Fix in all the cages moveable perches, which are made thus: In one end of the perch put a small nail or brad, sharpening the head with a file, and having made the perch in the first instance a quarter of an inch longer than is necessary, take a saw and cut to the proper length, and you then have an easy-fitting perch which can be taken out easily and cleaned. Have your perches to suit the birds according to their size, and not exactly round. When they are fixed they should not be one over another, as they soon get dirty, and clean feet are a great help towards keeping the bird in good health.

Some Necessary Precautions.

If you have a large cage so as to allow the birds room for exercise, it will not be easy for them to damage their plumage. Put some nice, sharp sand and some shell grit in the bottoms of the cages and hang a piece of cuttle-fish inside the cage now and then. Remember that all British birds require a bath (if the weather permits) at least once a week. Another thing is to let them have plenty of fresh air and sunshine, but be careful not to put them in draughty places. All cages should be disinfected twice a year, as this helps to keep down red mite.

Soft-bills kept in confinement require to be well considered with regard to their habits. Different cages are necessary for the different species. Some cages need to be padded and the food has to be put inside. Sawdust, bran, or chaff makes good material for the bottoms. The tins or vessels which contain their food should be cleaned out every day. If this is not done the food soon turns sour. The greatest drawback in the keeping of soft-bills is in regard to their feet. If you are not very careful the feet will get clotted over with dirt; the birds then get sore and cannot stand on the perch, while not a few lose their toe-nails in consequence. Sometimes birds have to stand down at the shows for this very reason, and their chances at the exhibitions are always very poor.

When and How to Buy.

There are right and wrong times for getting Soft-bills. You will often see birds advertised in the spring of the year, just after they have arrived. Birds that have been meated off make good show birds, but a lot of them are sold, I know, before they have been meated off, because I have bought them myself. I know from experience, therefore, that the spring is the wrong time to get them. And it stands to reason that when these birds arrive in this country they are mostly adult birds; they come back, most of them, to charm us by their beauty and their lovely song, and in a short time they pair up and breed. It is very rarely that a spring-caught bird settles down to cage life; and it does not matter what you do to them, or how you treat them—they simply sulk or pine away, and in the end die. Those that do live are, during the summer, very restless, and knock themselves about, so that they are not worth looking at.

The right thing to do is to get birds that have left their parents only some three or four weeks; they are then strong and plump and will get more settled by the time the migrating season arrives.

If you are thinking of keeping any Soft-bills, get some one to give you some advice on how to get them, for there is as much in buying as there is in keeping. What you want to do is to "get in" with a good trapper or with a reliable dealer (you will see dealers' advertisements in CAGE BIRDS) from whom the birds may be got. When the dealer gets the species you require, he will keep them for a time and get them on to the right food, after which he will write and let you know when he is sending them on. If coming from a distance, the birds should be fetched from the station, as if delayed long they will soon go wrong and probably die. When the dealer sends the birds he will stock them with food and tell you how to feed them. He will also send them in proper travelling cages.

When the Trouble Begins.

Most of these birds go on alright for a time, but when the time comes for their species to depart from our shores, the trouble begins. It is then that they become anxious to be free. They are very much on the move at night-time, so that it is a good plan to cover up the front of their cages so that they shall be in the dark during the night. Also darken the window of the room in which they are kept.

To keep them in good condition during this period they should be kept in cages two feet square, made of some soft material, or gauze; this will keep them steady as they can see through it; it also keeps them in perfect feather. All Soft-bills during the moult require an extra watch kept over them; they should not have too much bathing, but should have plenty of insect food—maggots or gentles are to be got at this time—and those that eat fruit will welcome any that is ripe.

Take great care to see that everything given them is fresh, and all that is left at the end of each day removed from the cage. Keep your eye on the perches and clean the cages out often. Food-tins and jars must be scalded out every day during the summer, and the water-glasses or tins well washed out.

On Making a Start.

Feed the birds regularly—not all one day and hardly anything the next. Regularity in feeding is another very important essential to success. That being so, I will give you a little advice on how to make a start. You have your cages, we will presume. Now give the Soft-bills, such as Nightingales, Black-caps, Whitethroats, Wheatears, Redstarts, Whinchats, Robins, and all the smaller ones, a plentiful supply of ants' eggs, mealworms, caterpillars, small beetles, flies, flesh-maggots, small earthworms, and little slugs, and wasp grubs, also supply spiders and butterflies. Any of these you will be able to get in the summer.

You can, of course, keep a stock of mealworms. You get a large jar or tin of them as stock and lay by for breeding purposes. Keep a lot of worms as stock; they will turn into small beetles, which will lay eggs. These eggs will hatch out and become mealworms. Keep an eye to them, and feed them on bran, etc.

Ants' eggs you can buy. You can give meat of different kinds, cooked and chopped up very fine; also give green food, such as lettuce, parsley, and watercress, which must also be cut up very small, and a paste made up of peameal, with the yolk of hard-boiled eggs. This is, I know, a varied menu, but it is one from which you may give the birds that which they like; you will soon find out which they are most fond of. Some birds like one thing, while others may not, perhaps, touch it.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Here let me make a strange note—the eggs were all without any markings whatever, and a dirty whitish blue in colour. Now, in all books I have read, it is said that the eggs of the Indigo Finch are blue with a spot or two of purple at the larger end. Did my hen lay abnormal eggs?

I soon saw, when the hen began to sit, that, like Humpty-Dumpty, who sat on a wall, my poor little friend would, unless I did something to avert the catastrophe, "have a great fall." The mere weight of her body made the nest lean over in the most ominous manner; and I saw that if it was to survive, artificial strengthening would have to be resorted to. Now there may be readers who, when they read what follows, will cry in derision Credat Judæus, but, as Bret Harte makes one of his characters say sometimes, "My name is Truthful James,"—at any rate, for this occasion.

Seeing that the nest was giving way in its supports—remember it was only suspended by the strands of grass from the branches—I determined that I would try a Cæsarian operation. Probably in America the Indigo Finch can find tougher material for suspenders than I can find in Yorkshire. I went indoors and found my wife's workbox. I selected a needle of fair and comely proportions, with the sort of eye a camel could go through, and some stout, black thread that would hold a healthy Zebra, and after spending some hours of patient labour, I succeeded in threading the needle.

Then I hurried off to the aviary and to the aid of poor Mrs. Indigo. I found her busily sitting, but in what I cannot but think must have been a painful position, as her head was down and her tail was up, and I saw that if things went on as they were doing, the precious eggs must fall to the ground, like Newton's apples, by the attraction of gravity. I looked at the little hen and I said to myself, "I wonder if you will stand what I am going to do? It is for your good and the welfare of your coming family; therefore pardon me."

I put out my finger and she skipped off with her little crest erect, and hopped on to a neighbouring branch, anxiously awaiting developments. I was as quiet and handy as a man could be with such a clumsy weapon as a needle to handle and a long bit of thread, and with an anxious bird looking on!

I passed the threads through the nest to act as suspenders (ladies, don't blush), until, like Johnny Gilpin, "I made the balance true." It took a bit of time, and it fair made me hot all over, but then, I am not a good hand with needle and thread. I had grave doubts as to whether my well-intentioned efforts would succeed; but it was kill or cure. I felt like Baden-Powell: it was a question:—

If we go forward, we die,
If we go backward, we die;
Better go forward and die.

My readers can supply the parallel.

To my surprise my little friend seemed to understand that I was only lending a helping hand, and when I came back a quarter of an hour later she was sitting on the eggs as if nought had taken place. To show my perfect veracity, I sent the nest and suspenders to a friend when all was over.

At the end of twelve days I found two eggs hatched and one egg clear; I was pleased over my luck, as I felt sure from past experience that I could rear them. Everything went happy as a marriage bell for a week, and the younsters grew all that one could wish. The next day was Sunday—a day of peace and goodwill; but in the country, Sunday is a day of terror to people who have aviaries, for the common necessary boy is then on the prowl. I went to evensong at 6 o'clock, but I forgot to fasten the padlock of the "Wilderness." When we came out of church I went across to the aviaries to feed up for the last time. As I crossed the field I saw three boys up a tree after a nest. I shouted to them fiercely, and they fled incontinently, but not before I had recognised them. It was a rare good thing I did, as the sequel will show.

On reaching the aviaries I found to my horror that the padlock had been stolen, and on looking inside I could see that someone had been inside! I said to my wife, "It is those boys, and I will be bound those young Indigos are gone." I entered with a dreadful feeling of sickness and crept hurriedly towards the Indigo's nest. Village boys would regard young Indigos with as little reverence as a lot of young Sparrows. To my joy the nest was there all right and the youngsters in it. I lifted my hat and said a Laudate, and I never meant it more. How that nest escaped will always be to me a miracle. I could have screamed for joy.

Then my thoughts turned to sweet revenge. I went to one of the boys and I said, "If you do not give me the padlocks you have taken, you will accompany me to the policeman." He protested with ashy face that he had never been near my garden, and had never seen any padlocks, did not know in fact what a padlock was! Unfortunately for himself, he had only a few minutes before offered to exchange them with another boy for a value received. I taxed him boldly with his deflections from the path of truth. He vowed he only had one padlock (a red one, of all colours) which his father had given him.

I again hinted at the man in blue. He reconsidered the matter—he knew who had got the padlocks. Would I let him go and fetch them? He soon named the offender. I consented. In about a quarter of an hour he returned with the stolen goods.

The next morning, it being Monday, I went to see Papa No. 1. I unfolded my tale and gave him the alternative of (1) giving the boys a sound thrashing himself, or (2) of going to a neighbouring Police-court. He elected the former without apparently consulting the people most deeply interested, and opined in a tragic voice that his lads would not come into my garden again. The tone was kind of suggestive, and I felt quite sorry for those boys, but then, I remembered also my poor little Indigo hen and her family, and the check of the whole thing, and I let matters take their course.

That same evening there came a knock at the back door; the maid appeared with a message. Could so and so speak to the Vicar; and when I went out to see, there stood paterfamilias and the two culprits, greeting right sore, and as I opined also right sore (forgive the pun) as to the lumber region! Papa had a good stout ash plant in his hand, as though to give ocular proof that justice had been done.

"There, Sir," he said, "I have given them a real good trouncing and they wont trouble you no more. Now then (to the culprits) beg the Vicar's pardon." I really felt a little sorry for the boys, and I freely forgave them. I should have liked to have given them sixpence; I am sure they had earned it, but then, that would have been to encourage vice!

Those Indigo birds are now locked up throughout the day, and woe betide any one who comes to molest them. I never so nearly lost a medal as I did on that eventful Sunday evening. The other and worst culprit, I have reason to believe, was "executed" on the same evening, but at a somewhat later hour, when his sire returned from late hay-making, and I believe the weapon of execution was identical.

Let this plain, unvarnished tale in which I have nought extenuated, though nought set down into malice, warn all who have aviaries to keep them locked, even on Sundays:

When wicked little boys delight,
To pull poor birdies nests out.

Training Rollers to Sing.

Many a new beginner in the Canary Fancy has asked the question: "What does it mean to train Rollers to sing, and how is it done?" It must, therefore, be a puzzling term to many novices to hear or read of training their birds to sing. And yet, a few minutes' cool, reasoning thought should suffice to show that the term is neither a vague nor an anomalous one.

The song of the Roller being wholly an acquired and artificial melody, it goes without saying that if the birds are to sing the orthodox song of the educated Roller, they must be placed under tuition whilst young, before they have begun to sing the song with which nature has endowed them, and which their intuitive instincts would lead them to perform if left entirely to their own promptings. Even members of the human race who desire to become proficient singers put themselves under recognised masters of the art to be trained and made as perfect as their natural powers will admit. How much more necessary it must be when one desires an unreasoning bird to perform an unnatural song to give it every opportunity of hearing the wished-for melody and cutting it off from all association with any extraneous sound it may be likely to pick up more easily, and consequently more readily, than the coveted sounds!

In a few words, the training of Rollers to sing means keeping them constantly in hearing of the song it is wished to impart until they are quite proficient in its performance, and at the same time excluding every other sound of any description of bird music. The inevitable result of these essential requirements is that the fancier with limited space at his disposal who wishes to breed Rollers for this song and to keep the song pure must necessarily make it an exclusive hobby.

How to Proceed.

No other birds of any kind should be kept, as it is scarcely possible for the small working-man fancier to house two classes of birds and ensure their complete isolation from each other in the matter of sound.

The process of training should commence as soon as the birds are quite able to be caged up separately. After leaving the parents the young birds may be drafted to large flight cages for a month or so to get well on to a diet of seeds before caging-up takes place, and during this interval should be left in the company of the parents, who will probably be engaged with another brood, in order that they may have the benefit of the adult cock's tuition. By the time the month has elapsed the young cocks should be singled out and caged off separately, and, if possible, removed to another room, where they will be out of ear-shot of the breeding pairs. Here they should have the company of one or two thoroughly good and pure singing Roller cocks as their principal tutors, and if a number of young birds are bred, or purity and quality of song are valued more than a little extra expense, a good bird-organ should also be provided and kept going for a few hours each day at distinct intervals, and especially in the early morning and during the evening.

The cocks selected as tutors should be chosen, if possible, from early moulting birds, so as to get them through the moult and on song again before the young birds drop in moult, in order that they may be in good song, or at least one of them, whilst the young birds are silent from moulting. Should there threaten to be a long interval of silence, then the organ should be utilised more freely to fill in the void.

The chief object to be aimed is to keep the birds constantly acquainted with the song they are required to learn from the time they are placed under tuition until their moult is over and they are in good, full, adult song. By this time the majority of them will probably be sufficiently educated for ordinary singing purposes, but others will be found slower in acquiring their lesson. But so long as a bird does not take up bad, choppy, or objectionable notes no anxiety need be felt on account of its being slow to learn. A slow learner is just as likely to make a proficient singer which will retain its song well as the more mercurial specimens.

Dealing with Lusty Singers.

One thing that the breeder must keep a watch over, especially after the moult is over and the birds have regained their strength and vigour, is the pitch of the birds' notes. If a bird is heard to put too much power into its song and pitch its voice too high, its cage should be covered over with a cloth, or better still, it should be placed in a singing box and the door kept shut for a few hours in the middle of the day, and at any other time when it is singing lustily and too loudly it should be covered over or shut up.

If the birds seem at all obstinate in this fault, it will do them no harm to keep them covered closely for a few days except for an hour or so morning and evening, so that they only hear the singing of other birds in a low, subdued tone. A good deal of patience may be required to break some birds of the habit, but the effort is one that cannot be neglected unless one is content to have the bird become little better than a common songster in a few months.

Training Mules.

Strange as it may appear there seems very little misunderstanding about the meaning of the term when it is applied to Mules or Hybrids; and yet in the case of Rollers which we have just been considering it is almost exactly analogous. Perhaps in the case of the Mule there may be some sort of hereditary instinct to sing the wild bird's note, but if left entirely to its own instincts it will generally sing a medley, giving more attention to any notes, good or bad, which it is most accustomed to hear when young.

When they are required to sing any particular melody, it is almost, or quite, invariably that of the Finch, and consequently the practical Mule-breeder for singing purposes must be careful to keep his young Mules isolated from the sounds of all other birds, save a good singing Goldfinch, Linnet or Siskin, or whatever the male parent may be. As a rule it is one or other of the two first-named Finches that are concerned in this matter, and the chief object in training is very often to utilise them as catchers' "call-birds."

Where valuable show birds are in question, the song, of course, is of little consequence. The value of the bird is then diverted into other channels, and size, health, plumage, steadiness, and general condition, are of prime importance.

BENGER'S
is quite distinct from any other. It possesses the remarkable property of rendering milk, with which it is mixed when used, quite easy of digestion by infants, invalids and convalescents.
Benger's Food is sold in Tins by Chemists, etc., everywhere.

Training Bullfinches to Pipe.

An entirely different phase of song-training is that relating to piping Bullfinches. It is also another point that is little understood, so much so that one may often hear bird-keepers of some years' experience enquiring about the proper way to teach a Bullfinch to pipe a tune, or, as is still worse, in blissful ignorance expressing the intention of trying to teach one.

It cannot therefore be too widely known that to expend any effort in attempting to teach an adult bird is just so much wasted energy. One may spend a whole year of persevering labour upon hundreds of adult birds, and would probably not meet with even partial success in one in every hundred birds taken in hand. In this case above all others, one's only chance of success is in teaching the young.

The birds must be taken in hand as soon as they leave the nest. Still better is it to begin before they leave the nest, in which case it is necessary to rear them by hand. By far the greatest measure of success is attained by this means, and beginning tuition as soon as the birds are taken in hand to rear them.

Begin by taking the young, nest and all, when the former are about ten days old. At this age they are a fair size and have plenty of strength to erect their heads and take their food, and can do without the warmth of the hen, if a layer or two of soft flannel or wool is laid over them, and they are still young enough to grow up with little, if any, knowledge of their natural parents. This latter point is of very great importance in rearing the young birds to be tame and sociable. Having procured the nest, place it in a small wicker basket, or box, on a thick layer of sawdust, and cover it over with the flannel keeping it covered as long as the young birds can be induced to remain under the cover. Some fanciers object to this prolonged covering, on the score of coddling the birds, but this is a very mistaken idea.

The warmth obtained by covering is of very great value in helping the growth of the feathers, and thus really tends to make the birds ready to be placed in a cage with perches more quickly than would otherwise be the case. There is no danger whatever of coddling or making the birds susceptible to cold, for they will not long remain under the cover after the plumage gets fairly well developed. The layer of sawdust is a great aid in keeping the nest sweet and clean.

*A Hawk versus Martins.

Last year I witnessed a very interesting contest between a Sparrow-Hawk and four Sand-Martins. The Martins attacked the Hawk with great ferocity. They chased it all over the place. It tried many times to get above them, but it was in vain. At last it fell to the ground exhausted and beaten. After pecking it well, the Martins left it.—Sent by W. H. Wilson (age 12), 227, Edward Street, Nuneaton.

*A Clever Bramblefinch.

My father keeps a few British birds, and among them is a Bramblefinch, a Chaffinch, and a Greenfinch. The Bramblefinch used to be very quiet, never saying anything; but when father parted with the Chaffinch, it started giving us the latter's call-note, "Pink, pink," very loudly and distinctly. In fact, it is now hard for one to believe it is a Bramblefinch. It also imitates the call-note of the Greenfinch and the chatter of the Linnets. It is altogether a very interesting bird and very tame. Father thinks it would breed in captivity.—Sent by J. T. Tait (age 10), 2, Durham Street, West Hartlepool.

Bullie and the Looking Glass.

When I was very young we had a tame Bullfinch. He used to fly about the house and sit on the top of the clock. He looked very wise when the clock struck the hour; he would turn his head aside as though he knew all about it. If you let him look in the mirror he would peck at his likeness and make a great fuss. Then he would dart behind to try and get the other. He looked very mad when he could not find him. He would take apple pips from our fingers. On one occasion he pulled my hair when I was too near his cage. But one day he flew out of the door, and we never saw him again.—Sent by May Benrose (age 11), 65, Egypt-road, Basford, Nottingham.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Enemies to Wild Birds.

There are very few of our wild birds that are not engaged in the duties of reproduction. Many of them have safely disposed of their first broods, and are quietly incubating their second clutches of eggs. The protection afforded by the thick underwood must be pleasing to wild life. Compared with the early spring months, when the foliage was scanty, the sense of security must be great. For this reason second broods are no doubt safely reared. If it were not so, many species would soon become somewhat rare. Nest-finding is now a difficult matter, and the wanton destroyers of anything unusually beautiful have become satiated with their lust for destruction. So the wild birds have a month or two of peaceful nuptial bliss. They have only their natural enemies to contend with. These no doubt need careful watching, and in many cases the parent birds are quite powerless to protect their young. Take the case of a stoat attacking the nest of one of the Finches. While working down the hedgerow he hears the baby cries of the young birds; he then very soon detects the locality of the nest, and to climb the tree and slaughter the whole brood is the work of but a few minutes. The old birds flutter round uttering plaintive calls, but are quite powerless to act. The larger birds would make a fight of it. If not actually engaging in direct combat, they would so buffet and worry the intruder that unless very hard-pressed for food, he would slink off to a more easy conquest. Ground-builders, or those nesting in the brambles and vegetation near it, must frequently suffer from stoats and weasels, for there can be no doubt small birds form the principal part of their food during the summer months. Nature is prodigal, and hundreds of wild birds are reared in excess of what are required to perpetuate the species, but then the dangers before they arrive to maturity are many, and when they do reach maturity they have still to survive the migratory voyage and the unknown perils of foreign lands before the following spring. If it were possible to ascertain the true figures, it would be exceedingly interesting to know what percentage of bird life survives to pair the following season.

Pretending to be Snakes.

Several of our wild birds that nest in holes in trees, hiss like snakes when disturbed, no doubt with the object of trying to frighten the intruder.

A Big Clutch.

A weekly contemporary published a photograph of a Dove's nest containing thirteen eggs. Considering that two is the normal clutch, this is extraordinary.—Even allowing for two hens nesting together, which birds have been known to do, the number of eggs would be still a long way from this unusual batch. It must be a case of co-operation in the propagation of the species.

Range of the Merlin.

Dixon says of the Merlin: "It breeds very locally south of the Peak, in Derbyshire, on Exmoor, and in Wales. From the southern spurs of the Pennine chain it becomes more widely and generally distributed throughout the moorland districts of England and Scotland, west of the outer Hebrides, and north to the Orkneys and Shetlands. In Ireland it is equally common in the moorland districts.

Birds and Agriculture.

In article on "Birds and Agriculture," in an old paper, the writer says: "People have become so accustomed to the bad ways of the Sparrows, that they take no steps to keep down their numbers." To lay poisoned grain about is contrary to our laws, but Mr. Tegetmeier, the naturalist, argues that if it is right to poison rats and mice because these creatures are a nuisance and destructive to property, the excess of birds which destroy fruit and crops should be dealt with in the same way. One could find arguments for and against.

Partial Albinism in Birds.

Partial albinism appears very inconstant among wild birds. It seems more rare for a few white feathers to increase than to disappear altogether. A year or so ago partially-white Sparrows were quite common in the village, whereas now they are rare. It is curious that there should be a wave of this lack of colourisation attacking a community for a time and then disappearing as quickly as it came. We have a Jackdaw flying about with several white feathers in its wings. He has nested in an old walnut tree, but there are no signs of albinism among the young; they are quite normal in colour. Possibly the old bird next year will resume its proper plumage.

BUSINESSES.

BUSINESS FOR SALE.

For immediate disposal, the Harrogate Bird and Livestock Stores. The Proprietor being unable (owing to other engagements) to give this well-known and well-established business his personal attention, has reluctantly decided to offer the same for sale. The trade is exceedingly high-class, both locally and by correspondence. The premises belong to the Proprietor, and are situated in the very best position in the town, immediately opposite the railway station. Attached to the premises are extensive out-door aviaries. The season for visitors is just commencing. This is a capital opportunity for any lady or gentleman fancier, as the trade attached is very different from the ordinary "bird shop" character. A large trade is done in toy dogs. Special facilities will be offered to any suitable applicant, and the amount of stock taken over would be optional. Apply — J. T. Hollins, "Bird Stores," Harrogate.

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

is a new word of Edwards' to tell you that Edwards' Song Producing Seed for Birds will keep yours in song, and if not singing will bring him in song. Ask your tradesman for it. The Edwards' Bird Seed without hemp in it, is a saving of 10 per cent., as the birds do not waste it to find the hemp. See that you get the original Edwards' with the words Birds Food Specialists on each packet or tin. If not obtainable, write us for nearest agent's address, A. and G. H. WILLIAMSON, GEMMELL & CO., Clifton House, 146, Lovely-lane, Warrington, Lancs., May 30, 1908. Messrs. Williamson, Gemmell and Co., seed merchants, 263, Argyle Street, Glasgow.—Gentlemen, — I am in receipt of the supply of cage bird seeds which I ordered on the 26th inst. I am pleased with the quality. Allow me, gentlemen, to say that I have bought this kind of seeds for my birds now for over four years from most seed merchants, but never before have I been able to get the quality of seed you consigned to me; in fact, the quality exceeded my expectations by at least 25 per cent. In conclusion, you may account me as another customer enrolled on your books for my future seeds, whilst you continue to favour me with such quality of seeds.—I am, gentlemen, yours faithfully, A. BOULTON BISHOP.

CLUB REPORTS.

CAMBORNE F.S.

At the meeting of this society held recently there was a very good attendance. Splendid reports as to funds collected and promised were given by the secretary. It was decided to hold the next annual show on November 19th, with Mr. C. E. Silk as judge. Several new members were elected, making the society a fairly strong one.—CHAS. J. ALLEN, Hon. Sec.

REIGATE F.A.

A meeting of the cage bird section was held on June 15th, at Mutton's Hotel, High-street, Redhill, when Mr. H. E. Tringham (London) kindly gave us a lecture entitled "A Chat about Yorkshires." There was a fairly good company of members present. The lecturer dealt chiefly with the breeding and exhibiting of the Yorkshire Canary. Several questions were afterwards asked, and were ably answered by Mr. Tringham. At the close a vote of thanks was passed to the lecturer, which brought a happy meeting to a close.—A. W. BACON, Hon. Sec.

WORCESTER AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held on June 25th, at the Black Horse Hotel, Lowesmoor. Mr. W. D. Johnson (Malvern) took the chair. Necessary arrangements for our first feather show on July 9th were soon in hand and settled. The following classes were arranged: One each Norwich, Yorkshires, Scotch Fancies, Border Fancies, Any Variety, Rollers, Brit Goldfinches, Brit. Bullfinches, Linnets, A.S. Hard or Soft Bill. Prize money on sliding scale. Three new members—Messrs. Philpotts, Edwards, and Tipping—were accepted. A hearty vote of thanks to our chairman, and also to several local tradesmen for valuable specials kindly promised, brought an enjoyable evening to a close.—A. E. BISHOP, Hon. Sec.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting at headquarters, June 15th, Mr. A. C. Burn in the chair. Mr. F. King was elected a member, and Mr. R. Stevens, 72, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, nominated. A vote of thanks was accorded Mr. W. Prance for presenting six show cages to be disposed of, and proceeds devoted to special prizes for annual show. Mr. W. G. Sanders was unanimously elected staging steward, to succeed Mr. Hart, whose resignation was received with regret. Circumstances preventing Mr. Curtis from accepting nomination as a member of the Executive Council of the C.B.U., Mr. J. W. Ramsden was nominated. Special prizes were given for the young bird show by Messrs. H. Offord, G. Saytch, W. Francis, and H. Robbins. Mr S. A. Sandy then delivered a lecture upon "Insectivorous Birds," and afterwards a hearty vote of thanks was accorded him.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec

SCOTTISH CREST CLUB.

A committee meeting was held in Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Glasgow, on June 27th. The secretary intimated that arrangements were now completed for holding the annual club show in conjunction with the Glasgow and West of Scotland on November 13th and 14th. The classification will be the same as last year's—seven classes for Crests and six for Crest-breds. Mr. Noble was nominated to judge, but in the event of his not accepting the invitation, Messrs. McKay and Chalmers are next on the list. Replies in the affirmative were also read from all the Societies which were asked to take part in the Robert's Cup competition. It was agreed that a vote of condolence be sent to the relatives of the late Mr. Wm. Cunningham (Coatbridge). Messrs. J. Sanderson and S. Loudon (Port Glasgow) were admitted to membership. Next meeting September 12th. Fanciers wishing to become members should communicate with me before that date, as this will be the last opportunity for joining this year.—R. ADAMSON, Secretary, 56, Petershill-road, Glasgow.

THE SHOWS.

DENHOLME & THORNTON C.B.S.

First feather show held on June 27th, when a fair number of young birds were staged. Mr. J. S. Clarkson acted as judge, and gave great satisfaction in placing the cards. After the birds had been cleared away, Mr. Clarkson gave a very interesting lecture on "Colour Feeding and Management of Canaries and Mules for Exhibition," which was instructive and highly appreciated.

CITY OF BRADFORD O.S.

A grand members' show of Canaries in first feather was held at headquarters, The Flying Dutchman, on June 20, when 99 birds were staged in 10 classes. Mr. J. S. Clarkson (Halifax) officiated as judge, and his awards gave every satisfaction. Competition was very keen in several of the classes, many of the winners being pressed very close for premier position. Points won at this show count towards valuable specials put up for competition by the society this year. The winners of most points at this show with three highest birds were Messrs. Lingley, Lndbrook, Fortnam, and Wharton Bros. in the open section, and Messrs. Hellewell, Horsfield, Bateman, and S. Horsfield, in novice section.

ROCHDALE GOOD INTENT C.B.S.

The society held their annual nest feather show on June 20th, when some excellent youngsters were put down by Messrs. Hartley, Radcliffe, Adams, and Rhodes in Lancashires, and Messrs. Hardy and Collinge in Crests and crest-breds. Foremost in the Yorkshires were Messrs. Clayton, Harrison, and Rayner, Lord, Schofield, Bescoby, and Faulkner; whilst in Norwich Messrs. Lees, Schofield and Clayton staged some very nice birds, one exhibit of the last-mentioned winning special for best bird in show. Mr. Clayton also won challenge cup and gold medal. Mr. A. Hirst (Accrington) judged.

SWINDON AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Annual first feather show held on June 17th. Mr. J. Robson judged, and made a few remarks upon the exhibits, explaining his reasons for placing each bird. Although some of the members have done well, others have done but poorly, and owing to this there was hardly the number of exhibits one would have liked to see. Still, a goodly number of birds faced the judge, and the quality was of the best.

Special for most points was won by Mr. A. Haigh, 29 points; and for best Yorkshire, by Mr. E. A. Whitehead.—S. LODGE, Hon. Sec.

SOUTH WEST LONDON C.B.S.

A young bird show was held on June 20th, judge, Mr. J. Robson. The classification was very good for a young stock show. The champion exhibits did not respond so readily as the amateurs and novices. This probably was due to two causes, viz., many of the champions live some distance from the district, and did not care to risk their birds out without some good inducement in the way of specials; and the season being rather late the birds have not yet been got into show condition. Several classes in the champions had to be cancelled. Messrs. Rennie and Harris showed some really good Norwich.

GREAT HORTON GOOD INTENT O.S

The society held their First Feather Show on June 27th at headquarters. This being the second of a series of members' shows, a great deal of interest was taken in the points' special lists as a new leader keeps popping up. The following won these specials: Messrs. H. F. Chubb, A. Holden, H. Schofield, T. L. Whitely, S. Briggs, and Geo. Newell. Mr. H. F. Chubb won a fancy teapot (given by a friend) with the highest starred birds. Mr. S. Dean (Great Horton) judged, and gave general satisfaction.

LEICESTER AND LEICESTERSHIRE HAND-IN-HAND C.B.S.

Annual young bird show held on June 27th at headquarters, White Swan Hotel. Mr. E. Fox (Long Eaton) judged. His awards gave every satisfaction. Entries came up better than for many years and showed an improvement on the usual high standard of quality. In the champion section Messrs. Walton and Noakes were again to the front with six entries. In the novice section Mr. H. Smith, with four birds, took two firsts and two seconds, and would have stood high in the open section. Some big prices were offered for some of the birds staged, but we did not hear of many of the owners being tempted to part with their birds.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

The members of the Metropolitan C.B.A. held a successful Young Bird Show on June 25, at the Crown Hotel, S.W., when upwards of 80 exhibits were staged. Among the birds were many of excellent type and quality, and which will be heard of again, given a satisfactory moult. The arrangements were very ably carried out by Mr. A. J. Head, who makes a capital secretary, Mr. W. Sawyer lending him a helping hand as steward. We understand the association is making excellent headway (no pun intended). Messrs. Cooper Bros. won the special over the champion section, with a big, chubby, marked Yellow Norwich, a very stylish bird of grand quality. In the novice section this honour fell to Mr. W. McGregor, with a grand fronted, lovely headed bird, full of quality, and of splendid carriage. We made it a yellow hen, and, if so, it is a bird to be doubly prized, and Mr. McGregor is to be congratulated on breeding it. Mr. W. H. Walker staged a fine heavily marked Yorkshire, which secured the special for best bird shown by a member who had never won a first prize. Mr. G. Saytch accounted for the special for best Border, which, by-the bye, turned up in force, and were a warm lot of youngsters. In the A.O.V. Class, Mr. F. J. Martin won with a clinking Cinnamon, sound and rich in colour, and of true Norwich type, a fine "baby." Mr. F. J. Martin also staged some very promising Norwich Plainheads, as did Messrs. Head and Sawyer, while Messrs. C. Peck, Aylott, and Nicholas put down very nice Yorkshires. A few excellent British and Foreign birds added interest to the fixture. No one seemed, however, to have bred any Mules or Hybrids. Mr. G. E. Weston judged.

STOCKPORT B.F.A.

The third annual show of young Canaries and Mules and of British and Foreign Birds took place at the Boar's Head Hotel, Stockport, on June 18th and 19th, when Mr. A. Wellings (Prescott) judged, giving every satisfaction. 180 birds were entered for competition, which was a very good entry, considering that some members have had a bad breeding season. Lancashires, though not very numerous, were excellent in quality. There was size in abundance, and such splendid shapes, especially the Coppies. A fine case of carvers was given by Alderman E. Clarke, J.P., for the best bird in show, and this was won by Mr. W. Lee with a ticked yellow Coppy. With ordinary luck, the bird should make one of the best. It was a very popular win, there being not a single complaint. Yorkshires were very nice, stylish and neat, some very taking birds being shown. Mr. Slater captured the ten-guinea challenge cup with four firsts, scoring 28 points. Lizards were grand, and acknowledged to be the best seen at a young show. The lacing was a treat, and the ground colour good. Norwich were very fine, both in numbers and quality, and grand in size and shape. Many good birds had to be content with cards. Cinnamons were not numerous, but were all there for size, quality, and colour. In Crests and crest-breds some very nice birds were staged. The winning Crest was a good one, with very long frontal, and should moult out well. British made up in quality for what they lacked in numbers. In the amateur and novice sections, a few birds were shown that would render a good account of themselves if they were shown in the champion section. The President, Councillor T. E. Dickenson (New Mills) opened the show, and congratulated the members on the excellence of the birds.

DULWICH O.S.

Annual show of Canaries and Mules (bred 1908) held at headquarters, the Herne Tavern, on June 18th, when there was a very large attendance of members and friends. A solid silver cup, value £2 2s., for the best bird in the show, presented by Mr. A. E. Rogers, was won (together with a gold medal presented by Mr. F. Gani, for the best bird shown by a novice), by Mr. J. Foster, with a rattling Plainhead Norwich. This bird was a Buff of splendid type, ticked on one wing, with beautiful feather, and rich in undercolour, bred, we understand, from two Buffs, and it was, moreover, the first winner Mr. Foster had bred, and about the only one he had been successful in rearing in this, to him, a bad season, so far as numbers are concerned. Mr. Foster was heartily congratulated on all hands. A couple of silver-plated cruets were also presented by Mr. W. Goodwin, for the most points in the champion and novice sections, and won by Messrs. Woolhouse and W. Brooks respectively. Mr. G. F. Woolhouse also won special for second best in the show, with a very typical variegated Norwich, closely pressed by Mr. W. Brooks, with a rattling Yorks. This latter gentleman also accounted for a silver-plated cup. The number of exhibits was good, and the quality highly commendable. Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni, the hon. secretaries, had the arrangements in capital order, and were courteous and obliging to all. At the close of judging, Mr. Geo. Gardner, who placed the awards, presented the cups, etc., to the successful competitors.

QUEEN'S PARK AND DIST. C.B.A.

The Society held their first feather show at the Emmanuel Hall, Harrow-road, on June 27th. 92 cages were staged, and Mr. J. Robson judged. Competition was very keen in several of the classes, and especially in the novice and special novice classes, and, taking into consideration the fact that so many fanciers in this district are complaining of poor results, the number and quality of the exhibits were alike very gratifying. The Society feel very satisfied with the result, and anticipate a financial success, the "gate" being very good. The show-room was quite crowded on several occasions.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

BOLTON AND DISTRICT O.S.

Annual First Feather show held June 20th, at the Joiners' Arms Hotel, Deansgate, when about ninety birds were staged. The quality of the exhibits was good throughout, many birds being staged both in champion and novice classes which, with a good moult, should be heard of later. In the Yorkshire section Messrs. Brooks, Smith, and Cavanagh staged birds of grand type and quality, and possessing true Yorkshire characteristics. In the Norwich classes Messrs. Hopkins, Smith, and Allen staged very nice specimens, whilst in the Crest section Messrs. Stringer, Ogden, Hart, and Simms put down some grand birds. Novice classes (a new venture for the Society) contained some smart birds, particularly the clear yellow Norwich exhibited by Mr. Longworth, the variegated Buff Norwich exhibited by Mr. James Gerrard, the wing-ticked yellow Yorkshire exhibited by Mr. Tootel, and the clear Buff Yorkshire exhibited by Mr. C. Brooks. Mr. James Stringer, the able secretary, had, as usual, everything in first-class order. Mr. J. W. Clemmeson (Preston) judged, and gave every satisfaction.

REDRUTH.

In connection with the Redruth Exhibition Society a grand open cage bird show (under C.B.U. rules) was held in a large marquee on June 24th and 25th. There was a record turn-out of birds, considering the time of the year. The exhibits were nicely staged, and amongst them were some grand birds, including Mr. Trevena's clear Yellow, a beauty which was shown in grand trim, and took reserve for best bird in show. The Yorkshires were a nice lot, especially those in the Yellow class, the winner standing well ahead of the rest. In the pairs and group classes for birds bred 1908 were some good birds, which, with a successful moult, will no doubt be heard of again. The Mule classes contained some grand specimens, including Mr. Collin's noted six-point, which again captured special for best bird in show. The Hardbill class was very good, the winner being a grand Hawfinch shown by Messrs. Rowe and Hancock. In the Foreign class a lovely Yellow-vented Blue Bonnet Parrakeet was shown in spotless condition. Mr. R. E. Climas, the energetic secretary, looked well after the arrangements; he was most courteous and obliging to all. The awards were made by Mr. Dan Browning.

CREWE AND POTTERIES.

The first inter-club nest feather show of the Crewe and District O.S. and the Potteries and District C.B.A.—two enterprising societies—was held on June 20th in the Co-operative Hall, Crewe. It was in every way a great success. There were close on 100 birds staged, and some real young beauties were to be seen in the various classes. The Norwich were capital, and some of those with luck will be heard of later on. Yorkshires were good, and most of the Borders superior young birds. The British and foreign birds were fine, and quite up to open competition form. Mr. Heaton, the hon. sec. of the Crewe O.S., with his willing band of enthusiasts, had matters very nicely in order, and the birds being staged all round the room, it left the centre quite free for visitors. A good light enabled all birds to be viewed fully. These inter-club shows might be entered into more generally by local societies in all districts with advantage. They would infuse more life and energy into fanciers, and would bring about a keener desire to make their society successful. These were very apparent at Crewe, and it will no doubt be enhanced when the second contest is held in the Potteries in July. Mr. Chas. Houlton judged.

A DAY IN EPPING FOREST.

By J. S. Clarke.

A Record of the Annual Outing of the Leyton and District C.B.A. and North London and Walthamstow Societies.

At the edge of the lake stands "Uncle Tom's Cabin." I don't know Uncle Tom, but I do know his teas are excellent. I am supported in this by the Leyton fanciers. Just one more amusing incident. I promised not to but I must tell it. One of the party was very keen on getting Bullfinches' eggs; so much so that it was noted by many. That wag again, on finding a Thrush's nest, shouted, "Bullie, 4 eggs." "Where? Where?" shouted our enthusiast, rushing up full speed. "Nowhere," replied that wicked wag, and again the welkin rang. Through the thornbush and hornbeam at Magpie Hill we posed for our first photographs. A pollard oak lying at the side of one of the green rides was requisitioned, and on its being rolled out from beneath the shade of the "Old Apple Tree" (oak, I mean), we ranged ourselves against it, with results of which readers may judge for themselves. And so working our way back and finding en route some three or four Jays, Greenfinches, Hedge Sparrows, and Wrens—past the big oak diagonally across the wood by the Cuckoo pits—out into Fairmead's Bottom, the home of the Nightingales—we found plenty of work hereabout and plenty of finds. But as they were duplicates of what have been previously mentioned, it is unnecessary to dilate upon them.

Shortly after the scheduled time, we reached the "Owl," where an excellent meat tea was served. After tea more photos and a musical evening, whereat every man who could sing was made to sing. Miss Grace Langdon very kindly presided at the piano, and apparently everyone enjoyed himself thoroughly.

In conclusion, I would express the wish that there should be an outing to Epping Forest annually, all London societies being represented. Some 5,500 acres in extent are secured by Act of Parliament to the people for ever. The Act also provides that "The conservators shall at all times, as far as possible, preserve the natural aspect of the forest, so that it shall remain a forest and not be civilised into a park." It is this beautiful woodland, teeming with bird life, that some people think I know a lot of, but which, in spite of a good many years' acquaintance, I know that I know comparatively little of. I hear people say (in ignorance) there is very little bird life, and speak in a tone as if intending to convey the idea that one afternoon's visit would exhaust its objects of interest. Take my word for it, a lifetime would not suffice to do so. Originally preserved for the King's sport and pleasure, it is little altered in character from the time of the Plantagenets, although the area is, of course, much less. In those good old days, if you were a Yeoman farmer you appreciated the forest laws: (a) your dogs were expeditated, that is, three claws of the fore feet were cut off close to the ball of the foot to prevent them chasing the deer; (b) the fences round your crops must be kept low so that a doe and her fawn could readily jump them; (c) you were not allowed to chase them away from your crops. Penalty—if a freeman, a fine; if a servile person, double the fine; if a bondman, flayed. This was also the penalty for chasing a deer or wild beast out of the forest, whether by accident or design. I am not sure, but I think it was by accident that one of the party drove a roe deer from her shelter, possibly he thought but little of the incident. None the less, it is lucky for him that he is living in the reign of Edward the seventh rather than that of Edward the second, when he would have been either fined or flayed according to his rank and the condition, for his breach of the forest laws. Of course, it is quite on the cards that our worthy friend, had he graced those ancient days, might have been an Archbishop or Bishop, an Earl or a Baron. In any such case he would have had the right in passing through the forest to take one or two deer. "By view of the Forester." If he be not present, then shall the taker cause a horn to be sounded lest it should seem a theft. It is a good thing those "Bullies" eggs were not annexed "By view of the Forester," and we all felt too horribly guilty to let the culprit blow his horn. Had he done so, possibly instead of sitting at home writing this article, I should have been in the company of those good fanciers at Epping, arraigned at the court of attachment, or its present day equivalent, but "All's well that ends well."

Members and friends of the Ashton-under-Lyne and Dis. O.S. should not overlook the ramble to Chew Valley this (Saturday) afternoon, meeting in the Old Square at 2.30 p.m.

We regret to learn that owing to a breakdown in health, Mr. W. Lilley, hon. sec. South-West London C.B.S, is reluctantly compelled to part with his birds, which are being advertised in our columns.

Will all members of the Gt. Horton Good Intent O.S. meet at 2 o'clock, July 4th, in Foster Square, for a ramble to Harden, along with the Wibsey C.B.S., writes Mr. Harry Schofield, the hon. sec.

My address is now Limbury Villa, Junction Road, Andover, Hants, until July 27th, when it will be, The Junction Hotel, Andover, Hants, writes Mr. J. W. Rennie. I am, I may say taking the whole of my stud of birds with me.

The annual Nest Feather show of the Cockermouth F.S. is to be held on July 18th, in the Public Hall Lodge Room, from 2 to 9 o'clock. Classes for old birds, Mules or Hybrids, British and foreign birds are included in the schedule.

A First Feather show in connection with the Glossop, Hadfield and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. Fred Grieg, the hon. sec., is to be held on July 25th. Members' subscriptions must be paid before the next meeting night, or they will not be eligible to compete.

The secretaryship of the Seaham Harbour and Dis. C.B.B.A., writes Mr. Hy. Dobson, has passed from the hands of Mr. Nicholson to mine, and all communications in connection with the society should be sent to me at 18, Muria Street, Seaham Harbour, Durham.

Our Mammoth show will be held as usual on August Bank Holiday, writes Mr. A. E. Brooks (41, Abbey Road, Cambridge), and the cage bird section will be held under C.B.U. rules. Two challenge cups and numerous specials will be offered, and the judge will be Mr. J. Robson.

The annual Nest Feather show of the Leicester C.B.S., writes Mr. J. A. Tyler, the hon. sec., will be held on Saturday (July 4th), when it will be open at about 4 o'clock. Admission will be free, and fanciers are invited to the hall at the "Hare and Pheasant" Hotel, High Street.

I am leaving this country for Canada in a few weeks' time, writes Mr. Geo. F. Hardeastle, sec. of the Sale Open O.S., and am taking up a position in the supply department on the C.N. Railway Co. of Winnipeg, so that I am having to advertise all my birds for disposal this week.

Am sorry to have had to discontinue my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS recently, writes Mr. T. H. Dent (Preston), but I could not keep up the supply, so great was the demand from all parts of the country. I have been entirely sold out, which fact speaks volumes for your valuable paper.

The following shows are being held under C.B.U. rules, writes Mr. Geo. W. F. Lythgoe, hon. sec. of the Cago Bird Union, and may be supported by Union members, viz.:—July 6th, Grimsby Gala; July 14th, Mansfield Woodhouse; July 24th, Knowle Flower Show; and July 25th, Crook Original.

Do not miss the City and Suburban Society's young bird show to-day (Saturday), at the Church Institute, 60, Paddington Street, Marylebone, W.—3 minutes' walk from Baker Street station (Metropolitan) and Regent's Park station (Bakerloo). Over 170 interesting exhibits for you to see.—ADVT.

The annual members' young bird show in connection with the Cardiff and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. W. S. Negus, the hon. sec., takes place at Naish's Royal Stores, The Hayes, Cardiff, on July 8th, when Mr. J. H. Payne judges. It is hoped our members will support the show to the best of their ability.

We are holding a First Feather show in connection with the Norwich Alliance All England C.B.A., at the Show Hall, Sussex Street, Norwich, on Saturday, July 18th, writes Mr. R. Roll, the hon. sec. Messrs. W. Fish and A. Wollard have kindly consented to judge. Entries confined to members; admission free.

The Paisley and Dis. N.M.B. and F.B.C. hold their First Feather show in the Painters' Hall, on July 11th, at 3 o'clock, writes Mr. R. McLerie, the hon. sec., when there will be a special for every class and a medal for most points. Members are reminded that subscriptions must be paid before this show, or they will not be allowed to compete. New members may be enrolled up to and including the day of the show.

Mr. Phil Jenkins (Swansea), has been elected to judge at our First Feather show on July 25th, writes Mr. D. Jeremy, sec. of the Morriston and Dis. C.B.S. The society have decided that the show shall be open, so that we hope to have a good number of exhibits, both from members and non-members. The venue will be the club-room at the Woodfield Coffee Tavern, and all birds must be staged not later than 3.30 p.m.

We have received a sample of "Tree-pine," the latest medicinal compound for birds, from the vendors, the Treepine Company, 52, William Street, Grays, Essex. It is claimed that this preparation (which will be found advertised in our columns) will bring and keep all kinds of cage birds into a natural healthy condition, and also assure them a successful moult if a few drops be given in the drinking water. Bird-keepers should give "Tree-pine" a trial.

The Cambuslang and Dis. C.B.A. intend holding a young bird show on July 11th, at 6 p.m., in the Free Gardeners' Hall, Cambuslang, writes Mr. Jas. Gray, the sec. The president, Mr. H. Livingstone, will judge, and the society hope fanciers in the district will avail themselves of this chance of being enrolled as members.

Kindly make it known, writes Mr. A. Wilkinson, hon. sec. of the Garston B.B.A., that our society has abandoned the Nest Feather show which should have taken place this Saturday, July 4th. The reason for this is that the majority of our members have experienced bad results this breeding season very few young having been reared.

We have arranged to hold our young bird show (open) on July 25th, at the Royal Hotel, Hamilton, writes Quarter-Master Sergt. Cant, A.P.C., sec. of the Hamilton Cadzow Oaks O.S. Entry fee will be 6d. per bird, returned in prize money. The doors will be opened at 5 p.m., admission free. A smoking concert will take place at termination of show.

The young bird show of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.S. is fixed for Saturday, July 11th, in the Avondale Hall, Landor Hotel, Landor Road, when Mr. G. E. Weston will officiate as judge. An attractive display is anticipated, as this society is making great progress under the able leadership of its sec., Mr. S. H. W Baker (11, Foulser Road, Upper Tooting), who will be glad to hear of new members.

OBITUARY.

Mr. JOHN PEEL (Wigton).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. John Dixon, that I have to announce the death of Mr. John Peel, of Union Street, Wigton. Mr. Peel passed peacefully away at his residence on June 24th. He was a well-known exhibitor, who used to show as J. and J. Peel. He won prizes at most of the big shows, including the Palace, with that little gem the Border Fancy, being especially good with the even-marks. Mr. Peel leaves a widow and two children to mourn his loss, and I am sure that everyone who knew him will sympathise with them in the great loss they have sustained.

Mr. H. MERCHANT (Rutherglen).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. William MacAulay, that I have to inform you of the sad death of Mr. Harvie Merchant, of McDonald Street, Rutherglen, on June 20 h. While out cycling on the Kilmarnock Road, near Newton Mearns, he had the misfortune to collide with a motor car, death resulting. The deceased fancier was a member of the Scottish Norwich Plainhead Club, and the West of Scotland and Rutherglen Societies. He bred some good Norwich, and was highly respected in the Fancy. His sad end will be mourned by a host of friends.

Mrs. T. J. RICKARD (Redruth.)

It is with deep regret that we learn of the death of Mrs. T. J. Richard, of Redruth, who passed away on June 3rd. The deceased lady was very fond of birds, and a devoted helpmate to her husband, who is a successful breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The funeral took place on Saturday, June 6th, before a large number of friends, including many bird lovers.

A copy of the revised rules of the London and Counties O.A. reaches us from the sec., Mr. R. J. Pretty (6, Old Burlington Street, London, W.) An excellent programme of instructive lectures, washing, and other exhibitions, etc., has been drawn up. Bird-lovers desirous of becoming members of this progressive association should send along their names to the secretary.

A smart and up-to-date price-list of cages, general bird-room appliances, seeds, foods, etc., reaches us from Messrs. Linsey and Son, of Cherryhinton Road, Cambridge. It is very nicely illustrated from photographs, etc., and should be seen by all bird-keepers who desire their rooms and appliances to be in the latest style The "Cambridge" breeding cage is a speciality of Messrs. Linsey and Son, who have been awarded gold and silver medals at the Crystal Palace for their work.

The "Poultry World," that journal for the poultry-keeper which has leapt into such unprecedented popularity, commencing with the next issue will be on sale on Friday morning, instead of Thursday as heretofore, the heavy pressure of shows rendering this change necessary. Readers who experience any difficulty in obtaining their copy will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, at 154, Fleet Street, E.C.

There have been many substitutes for egg offered to bird-keepers from time to time, but none seems to have met with such wide acceptance as "Woodland Bird Milk," which, the proprietors inform us, is selling splendidly, repeat orders flowing in daily from delighted users. One can hardly be surprised at this, however, seeing the glowing testimony to its merits given by the members of the Preston O.S., and Mr. C. Blackhurst, M.R.C.V.S., after giving it a lengthy trial upon their exhibition stock. It is a very cheap food, compared with eggs, and saves the user a great deal of time and trouble. We advise all readers who have not yet tried "Woodland Bird Milk" to send along a trial order at once (1s. 6d. per lb., post free), to The Creamery Co., Garstang, Lancs.

Kindly thank all who answered my advt. in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. Whiteside (Burnley). There were too many for me to reply to, and I am well suited.

I had so many applications for my variegated cock Canary, which I advertised for sale in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. T. Flannery (Brooklands), that I could not possibly reply to them all.

We have engaged Mr. J. H. Roe (Derby), and Mr. A. G. Cameron (Kelso), as the judges for our annual open show, November 20th and 21st, write Messrs. Reid and Maddison, secs., Sunderland C.B.A.

The Nest Feather show of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. (with Mr. A. G. Davis as judge), takes place to-day (July 4th), in the Coal Exchange, Market Place, opening at noon and closing at 8 p.m. Thirty-two classes are comprised in the schedule, which includes Hybrid, British, and foreign birds.

The following well-known fanciers have been supplied with Ramsden's Pure Peppers during the past few days—what further proof is needed that the elite of the Fancy are colour-feeding on Ramsden's Pure Peppers?—Messrs. Ackroyd, Adnitt and Driver, Anthony Brown, Baker, Barnes, Bray, Broadley, Bailey and Swanger, 100 lbs.; Browning, Bennet, Carter's, Campbell, Cottier, Cocks, Crabtree, Crisp, Golton, Sheffield, 168 lbs.; Cafferty, Duncan and Logan, Judge Dewar, 120 lbs.; Easterling for Southern Yorkshire Club, 350 lbs.; Eckersley, Guy, Godden, Gilbert, Coventry, 100 lbs.; Grain, Greaves, Hacker, Holmes, Hodder, 36 lbs.; Harding, Hartley, Henderson, Hall, Helliwell, 90 lbs.; Hopkins, Haigh and Son, Jones, Kean, Knight, Kemp, Luer, Love Cock, Males, Mabey, Matthes, Maillet, M'Nicol, Judge Mundell, 120 lbs.; Nason, Northampton, 100 lbs.; Newley, Norwich Clubs per secretaries, Thompson, Hobart, Chapman, Barbee, Roberts, Syder, and Williment, 750 lbs; Pattrick, Palmer, 80 lbs.; Perkins, Rennie, Roehl, Radcliffe, Leeds, 100 lbs.; Richardson, Spencer and Son, Judge Swaysland, Stone, Smith, Spillman, Devonport, Thornton, Thompson, Trengove, Trower, Tyler, Webb, Whiteside, Williamside, Judge Weston, Yates, Yeates, and hundreds of others too numerous to mention are using the best and finest peppers on earth—Ramsden's. Remember, Ramsden's Special Prizes for next show season will be confined to competition for those fanciers who have colour-fed their birds only and solely on Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Ramsden's Peppers are absolutely pure and fully guaranteed under the Food and Drug Adulteration Act. The only peppers advertised with such a guarantee. Prices, 2s. lb.; 5 lbs., 7s. 6d.; 22lbs., 30s.; all post or carriage paid. Finest hot Natal, 3s. post free. J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London, S.W. (ADVT.)

National British Bird & Mule Club.

Will secretaries who have not already sent, kindly let us have their applications for our support, with particulars as to judge's name, date of show, and the number of classes, before Saturday, July 25th next?—PLUMBRIDGE AND CARR, hon. secs., N.B.B. and M.C.

Returned to the Fold.

We hear that an old Yorkshire fancier, in Mr. Driver Robertshaw, has once again taken up the bird of grace and beauty. He has gone into partnership with Mr. Ross, and they have already some 60 promising youngsters on the sticks, so that the Halifax Yorkies during the coming season should muster more strongly than ever on the show bench.

Welsh Cage Bird Club's Patronage

Applications for the club's patronage must reach me by July 27th. They will be considered on August Bank Holiday, after which date no application will be considered. Four cups and also a number of medals will be offered for competition (which is confined to members only) for most points gained by three birds, in their individual classes. The classes will be divided into two sections—first, Canary section; and second, British birds, Mules, and Hybrids, and foreign birds. No member who has not paid his annual subscription will be eligible to compete for any specials or cups offered by the club. I should be glad to hear from, and supply information to, any fancier wishing to join the club.—D. H. TEDSTONE, hon. sec., 4, George Street, Brecon.

Members and friends at the annual outing of the Sowerby Bridge and Dist. C.B.S.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

THE date of closing for the Yorkshire Union Year Book has been fixed for July 7th, and therefore all fanciers who are in doubt as to their proper address having been sent in, should communicate with the sec, at once. Also those who wish to advertise in the Year Book must see that the matter is sent off without delay, as it is near the time for the book to be out. The strength of the Union is close upon 1,200, and every member will receive a copy gratis, so that it should prove one the best possible advertising mediums.

MEMBERS' shows were again to the front on Saturday last, the largest being the one held at Manningham, where over 100 birds were staged, and, I hear, some "toppers" amongst them. One feature of this show was the gift class, which contained 13 entries. These were put up by auction during the afternoon and realised £2 12s 6d. which sum is to be expended on the purchase of a wreath for their late member, Mr. M. H Robinson who died some two or three weeks ago. This shows to some extent the high estimation in which he was held by his brother fanciers. Great Horton Good Intent also had a nice little show, some neat birds being staged; with a satisfactory moult many should give a good account of themselves later.

THE Open Norwich Plainhead Club holds its meeting to allot patronage to-day (Saturday), at headquarters, the Market Tavern, Bradford, and all interested are heartily invited to attend. This matter is an important one in regard to the welfare and progress of the club; much depends upon the placing of the shows to the best advantage, more especially where the breed needs cultivation and advancement. The management is in good and efficient hands, so reliance can be placed upon their decision.

THE suggestion mentioned last week with reference to the expenses of delegates to the Yorkshire Union from outside districts, is to be brought before the societies composing the Union, and a report of the views of the societies is expected to be brought forward at the next meeting of the council. The idea is to pool the expenses of those delegates from outside the area served by the Bradford City tramways, and each society to bear its share of these expenses in accordance with the number of delegates it possesses. The item is only small; still, it means much to some of the societies, as it costs them up to thirty shillings or more during a year to have themselves properly represented on the Y.U. Council. "STRAIGHT UN."

SOWERBY BRIDGE & DIST. C.B.S.

Annual Outing.

The members and friends of the society went for a ramble on June 20th. They left Sowerby Bridge by motor train to Rishworth, and then proceeded along the side of the stream and through the woods. Here the secretary photographed the group. Everything was looking at its best, and here the scenery is weird and grand. We arrived at a farmhouse, and the good wife was coaxed into making tea for us—a task that almost frightened her. But by the aid of a good pair of bellows, and some patience, she finally succeeded. After tea we adjourned to a field and had a cricket match, the sides being chosen by the treasurer and the secretary. The secretary's side proved the losing one, as they had to finish with only half a hat. After this we set off again, and made a halt at the Derby Inn, a place famous on the moorlands. Then back again to Rishworth station and home, having thoroughly enjoyed a glorious day and beautiful scenery. Everyone proved good company, and expressed his (or her) joy at having joined in so jolly and so good an outing.—A. E. MORTON, Hon. Sec.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Multum in Parvo.

B.J.—I do not think you could have quite followed the advice to the letter given in the book you mention, or you would not have been giving young birds drugs or medicine of any kind without a very strong reason for doing so. 1. At this time of the year it would not be necessary, or even advisable, to make use of artificial heat in transferring your birds from the living room to a bedroom with a window facing south. You may quite safely move them there without any addition to the normal heat, which is quite warm enough for anything now. See the room is well ventilated. You cannot admit too much fresh air now; but do not let a draught go direct into the cages. 2. A good egg-cake is made of three eggs, half a pound of flour, a heaped tablespoonful of moist sugar, one ounce of beef dripping, and a pinch of carbonate of soda. Make into a cake and bake in a moderate oven. 3. Your young Canaries are evidently not treated correctly. Do not try to make them eat soft food, and instead of feeling anxious about their craving for Canary seed you should give it in unlimited quantity, and be glad they are rational enough to prefer that which is best for them. Give plain Canary for staple diet. Twice a week give half a teaspoonful of hemp per bird, and on two other days a similar quantity of rape. A small teaspoonful of the above cake crushed into crumbs, or ordinary egg-food, should be given each bird twice a week. Vary the extras so that the birds get a different one each day. A spray of chickweed or groundsel may be given every other day after the birds are six weeks old. The half-ripe seed stalks of plantain may be given freely at any time. For two days give four drops of syrup of buckthorn in the drinking water. 4. The Roller may be stopping singing on account of the moult approaching. Try ten drops of glycerine, five of syrup of squill's, and as much chlorate of potash, every second day for a week, as will cover a sixpence, in his water.

Success and Failure.

"Nary."—It is a pity you did not continue to faithfully adhere to instructions for rearing which you might have seen in this column very frequently of late. It is certainly annoying, after carefully following up treatment advised, and meeting with unqualified success, to find it again turned into a dismal failure by striking out in a line of your own. No doubt your treatment was chiefly responsible for the final catastrophe. Anyway, try again, and hope for better luck. Follow up same line of treatment as formerly advised to get hen to go to nest. When she lays, remove first three eggs as laid, keep carefully in a small box of bran, turning it over morning and night. Replace eggs in nest on the evening of the day the third is laid. This will cause them to be hatched on the same day, and thus all the young get an equal start in life. Withdraw egg-food and all extras whilst the hen is sitting. When young are hatched, give pure egg yolk first day. After, add bread crumb, or equal parts of bread crumb and crushed sponge cake, by easy stages until on the fourth day you are giving a third part of each. Begin to give a little green-food—chickweed or groundsel, for choice, but no dandelion—on the third or fourth day, and when the young are over a week old begin to give a little hemp seed. When they are a fortnight old an unlimited supply of the latter may be given. Do not give strong drugs in the water as at this young are in the nest.

Bare of Feathers.

Anxious.—Your feeding is decidedly faulty, and has doubtless much to do with the bird's condition. Keep to the following general treatment, and the bird may improve greatly at the moult. Improvement in these cases, however, is rather doubtful, and always slow, except at the proper moulting season; so do not expect too much immediately. For staple food give a mixture of three parts Canary and one part summer rape. Twice a week give separately half a teaspoonful of hemp; once a week a small piece of bread and milk, with just the slightest sprinkling of flour of sulphur dusted over it, once a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. On each of the remaining days give a pinch of maw seed. Vary the things given each day, so that the bird does not get the same on two consecutive days. Every day give a spray of green-food—either chickweed, groundsel, or shepherd's purse. Allow it to bathe as often as it likes, but see that it does not get chilled after it. In the drinking water for the first week give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and as much Epsom salts, two days in every three, as will cover a sixpence. The next week give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day, and on the alternate days twelve drops of chemical food. After this drop the acid, and continue the chemical food right up to the beginning of the moult.

Is it Palpitation?

N. Humphreys.—The bird may be a little wheezy, but I think the chief cause of its trouble is overfeeding, and its age will begin to tell against it now. Do not give elaborate seed mixtures. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and twice a week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, over which sprinkle a few grains of gold of pleasure seed each time, for the next fortnight. Do not give any more bread and milk, but limit its diet solely to the above for a few weeks, with the exception of giving a free supply of green-food every day. Give plenty of gritty sand, and see that its cage is not infested with insects. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every other day for a week, and on alternate days twelve drops of chemical food. After the first week discontinue the first-named mixture, and give four drops of tincture of steel twice a week for two or three weeks. Continue the chemical food three times a week for a month from the start.

Hen with Asthma.

E.W.—No, you would not run any risks of giving your other birds asthma by turning a bird with the complaint loose into an outdoor aviary. As your aviary is so well situated, there is a good chance of the hen throwing off the complaint if turned out, provided she is fairly active. I have known many cases of asthma and wheeziness of long standing completely cured by being turned out in an open-air aviary. If the wheezing is very bad you had perhaps better treat her in a cage for a fortnight before turning her out. If you decide to do this, give her twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil in each ounce of drinking water every second day. Shake well together to thoroughly break up the oil into minute globules. You may give this treatment even if you are going to allow her to breed. I would, however, advise you not to breed with her at all this year. After being in the aviary a few months she may be in much better condition for breeding next season.

Young Canaries Dying.

T.J., Bangor.—Your feeding is probably at fault. After the young are well able to care for themselves, and are finally removed from the parents, gradually drop off the egg-food and get them on to a diet of Canary seed only as a staple. Twice a week give a little hemp, which may be slightly cracked until the birds are well able to crack it for themselves, and twice a week a little dry rape seed. A small quantity of egg-food or crushed sponge cake, or a piece of bread dipped in milk, and pressed nearly dry, should be given twice a week. Give all these on alternating days so that the same variety is not given on two consecutive days. A small spray of chickweed, lettuce, or groundsel may be given every second day after the birds are six weeks old. The half-ripe seed stalks of plantain and shepherd's-purse may be given freely at any time. The same kind of treatment will also do for young Mules.

A New Beginner.

"Rank Novice."—Let us hope you will soon rise to the rank of cup winner. 1. For 15s. you should be able to get a fairly good pair of ordinary Norwich, but nothing in the exhibition or champion line. The best you could hope to do with such birds would be to breed a good type of bird for singers, with the added chance of breeding an occasional specimen fit to exhibit—mind, I do not say win—at small local shows. To have a good chance of breeding a few fair exhibition specimens you would have to give somewhere about two pounds at least for a pair of birds. A better plan would be to give three or four pounds for a cock and two hens, and work the cock with the two hens alternate'y. 2. No, the end of August is certainly not a good time to buy the birds unless you had some experience in moulting them and keeping them through the winter, and had some trusty experienced fancier to help you to make a suitable choice of stock. Failing these important qualifications you would be well advised to defer the purchase of birds until towards the end of next February. If you have some experience in keeping them, then buy about January. 3. Personally, I prefer breeding and flight cages to be done inside with distemper, which can be scraped and washed off every spring and a new coat put on. But for those who prefer enamel the sample you enclose would be very suitable, except the colour. For the colour I prefer a very light stone, cern, or even white, for breeding and flight cages. If a tint was used, then I should use a light shade of blue-grey, about as light as the shade of green in your sample. 4. See reply to "Roller" in this issue for a course of treatment which might have done this hen good. You did wrong to treat her for egg-binding, as that was clearly not the trouble. It is not invariably true that singing hens are of no use for breeding. Some of them will breed very well, but as a rule they are not of much use. Considering this hen's age and her past history, I should strongly advise you to discard her altogether for breeding. You will probably never get anything but disappointment out of her.

Canary in Bad Plumage.

Jock.—I am afraid you will now have to wait until the moult before you find much improvement. You should, however, first of all see that the bird and cage are perfectly free from red-mites or grey lice. If either of these pests is present it must be thoroughly eradicated, then the bird will doubtless recover its perfect plumage at moulting time without any treatment at all. To help it, and give it the best chance of recovery, feed generously, but mostly on a plain wholesome diet; give plenty of green-food daily, especially chickweed; give frequent baths, in which a little quassia is soaked twice a week, and a regular supply of clean gritty sand; and twice a week add fifteen drops of chemical food to the drinking water.

Not Laying.

Roller.—No, I cannot tell you why your hen which has built a nest, and has been mating regularly for the past four weeks, does not lay, except that Nature has not provided the necessary eggs to complete the task begun. She may be an old hen which is getting past breeding, or if a fairly young one, she may perhaps have been overtaxed, or allowed to breed too long, last year. There is not much the matter with your feeding, but I would advise you to stop giving the mixed seed, and give instead a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake every second day, mixing with it at alternate times first four drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and next a sprinkling of iuga and gold of pleasure seed mixed together in equal quantities. Also stop giving the chemical food in the drinking water, and give instead as much Epsom salts for three days as will cover a sixpence, and after that four drops of tincture of steel every second day for a week. Now that the weather is very warm you should keep a close watch on any hen that is sitting on the nest a good deal like this one, in order to keep down red-mite by dealing with them as soon as they put in their appearance.

Crest-bred and Rings.

"Rings."—1. I think the diet is the chief cause of the crest-bred being so slack and out of condition. Treat as follows for a few weeks, and you will doubtless find him greatly improved. As a staple food give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and twice a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed with it once each week. Give a good supply of green-food daily—either chickweed, or dandelion, or both. Discontinue all other foods for a time. In the drinking water dissolve a piece of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea every second day for a week, and on alternate days give five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. During the second week give four drops of tincture of steel every second day in the water, and afterwards twelve drops of chemical food three times a week for another fortnight or so. 2. The swelling on the top of the foot is probably due to the rings chafing a little, or they may be too heavy for these particular birds when first put on, owing to the birds being either more susceptible or a day or two younger than their nest mates. You should gently rub in a very little cold cream, or pure vaseline, about three times in a week. If the swelling goes down after the first dressing you need not repeat it. Of the two rings you sent I prefer the smaller on account of its being the less conspicuous, and the lighter, whilst serving every useful purpose just as well as the larger one.

Young Canaries Dying.

A.D.—Am afraid it is the old, old story. So long as the young are fed by their parents they do well, but as soon as they are feeding themselves they are practically killed by kindness. Your feeding is, I believe, the sole cause of your loss; but, still, as they have died off rapidly, it would be a wise policy to have a post-mortem on one of the next that die, in order to ascertain whether you have septic fever among your birds. Meantime, feed your young birds as follows: After leaving their parents give an unlimited supply of plain, good sound Canary seed in the seed boxes, and each day give a very little cracked, not crushed, hemp seed, and a small quantity of egg-food. Do not give more than about three-fourths, and sufficient of the egg and hemp combined to support them altogether. As soon as you find them cracking Canary seed freely, as shown by the empty husks cleaned out of the cage, decrease the quantity of egg and hemp gradually for a few days, then give only one of them each day, alternately, for a few days longer. Then give only a small quantity of hemp, without cracking, twice a week, and half a teaspoonful of egg-food twice a week; or you may give a small piece of bread dipped in milk and squeezed nearly dry twice a week instead of egg-food, or give egg-food once, and bread and milk once; and twice a week about half a teaspoonful of dry summer rape per bird. Give no green-food until the young are six weeks old, then give a little tuft of the flowering head of groundsel, or a spray of chickweed, or a few half-ripe seed stalks of plantain. Keep cage clean, strewn with gritty sand, and see the water supply is always clean and fresh. If you follow this treatment consistently, and give nothing else, I think your losses will soon cease. Do not give the sponge bun you speak of as a substitute for bread and milk. Use plain wholesome stale bread.

Rings for Canaries.

W. S. Brewster.—I do not care about the rings of which you send a specimen. It is not only very difficult to put them on so that the ends just meet as you say, but there is a deal more risk of hurting the bird's leg in taking them off should it be necessary to remove them any time. If they overlap at the ends in putting them on, then there is almost sure to be some chafing, as well as the risk of pinching the leg and causing it to swell. You should use the rings which have a small portion at the ends turned back, so that when the ends are pressed together there is a kind of small spur projecting. With these it is practically impossible to make the ends overlap in pressing them together, and they can be easily removed if required by inserting the thumb nail between the spur. The birds that act as you say have probably not grown accustomed to the presence of the ring so quickly as the others. If the leg and foot keep quite normal in appearance you need not worry, but it will do no harm anyway to just smear the foot with a little cold cream or pure vaseline.

Young Birds and Colour Food.

Alpha.—If you think the cock is about dropping into moult, by all means begin to give colour food, even although it is now helping to rear a brood of twelve-day-old youngsters. It is not really necessary to separate him from the young in order to do this. All you have to do is to mix a little tasteless red pepper—say, as much as will cover a threepenny-piece—well amongst a tablespoonful of egg-food, and give it the birds to feed the young with in the ordinary way. Providing only that you use pure pepper without any other admixture, you need not have the slightest fear about the young taking any harm. All you have to be on the lookout for is whether the birds feed as freely upon soft food with colour added as they do without it. There is not often much risk of their not doing so, as the majority of birds soon show a decided preference for the food with colour added—at least, that is my experience. By leaving the cock with the young you will have the advantage of being able to let him finish them off until they are quite on their own, and the colour they have had will be beneficial to them rather than otherwise. You need not worry if the cock should start dropping a few stray feathers a few days before the young are quite able to be taken away, as the amount of colour food he will be having will be quite sufficient to prevent patchiness.

Age for Moulting.

"No Name."—The age when young birds start to moult varies according to the time when they are bred. It will range from about eight weeks to three months, or even to five months in the case of exceptionally early hatched specimens. Thus a bird hatched in February will probably begin to moult about the end of July; those bred in April or May about August, and the bulk of the remainder about end of August or in September. The later hatched ones begin to moult at an earlier age than those hatched earlier in the year. As a rule you should begin to give a little weak colour food to all the young birds about the middle of August, and increase the strength as they appear to be dropping into moult. This, of course, is excepting the very early hatched ones, which must be observed from the middle of July onwards, and commence to give colour food as soon as they begin to grow dull and listless in anticipation of moulting. If you have them on half-strength colour food for a week before any feathers are dropped you will be quite safe.

Sits Thick and Puffy.

J.B.M.—You have been feeding the bird too luxuriously. A bird kept singly in a small cage certainly does not need frequent doses of egg and hemp seed at a season, but least of all now. A plentiful supply of crisp fresh green daily would have been much better for him in every way. For the next week or two now limit his diet to plain Canary seed in the hopper, with an unlimited supply of green-stuff—especially chickweed—daily, and once a week only give a half teaspoonful of dry summer rape, and on one other day a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake. In the drinking water give ten drops of syrup of buckthorn every second day for a week, and on alternate days five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. After the first week give in the water four drops of tincture of steel every second day for another week.

Canary with Sore Feet.

F.L.H.—This may be due to badly shaped perches, or to a looseness in the bowels causing the cages to be dirty, and the excrement drying about the bird's feet. You must first attend to these points and see they are remedied if at fault. Especially see that there are no sharp edges on the perches, and that they are kept quite clean. To cure the soreness catch the bird and bathe the feet for a minute or two in a warm and fairly strong solution of boracic acid. Then dry carefully and anoint them very sparingly with a little zinc ointment, again wiping off all the surplus grease so that it will not help to collect dirt and sand from the cage floor.

Separating Birds.

"Novice."—As your birds have already had three nests this year I would certainly advise you to break up the pairs now as fast as opportunities occur. To do this when the cocks have been left with the hen and are attending to the young satisfactorily, you should leave them together until the young leave the nest. When they have been on the perches a day or two take away the hen and turn her into a large flight cage where she can get plenty of vigorous exercise, and leave the cock with the young, who as a rule will attend to them much better than the hen until they also are able to be drafted into a flight and look after themselves. Do not follow the reverse way, and take away the cock, leaving the hen to finish off the young unless you are perfectly satisfied from former experience with her that she will do so. Otherwise you may find she has deserted them at a time when the cock also has got weaned from them, and refuses to resume parental charge.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Looseness of Bowels.

Miss Pitt.—Diarrhœa, or looseness of the bowels, with offensive excreta, is generally a condition set up by unsuitable or stale food, or sudden change of food, or overmuch greenfood given suddenly to a bird not regularly used to it. The best treatment is to begin by clearing out the bowels with one dose of saline medicine (sulphate of soda) as advised another querist this week. Then for your Mule the most soothing and likely treatment would lie in a change of diet to Osborne biscuit soaked in new milk, squeezed dry, and then well sprinkled with maw seed. If the bird is not used to tackling soft-food (let same be always fresh and sweet) take away its seed-hopper for a short period. When it is eating it freely, mix in a small saltspoonful of prepared chalk (obtainable of a chemist). Watch the effect on the bowels, and change gradually back to ordinary seed diet when the desired result has been obtained. If the looseness is only slight, for three or four days dissolve in every two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much citrate of iron as will lie on a threepenny-piece, likewise watching its effects. Give plenty of ripe seeding plantain and shepherd's purse, teazle and maw seed.

Colour-feeding Yellowhammer.

Novice.—Yes; your observations were quite correct, for most of the winning Yellowhammers undoubtedly get a little colour-food during the moult. There should be no trouble in colour-feeding a Yellowhammer, as these birds are usually very partial to a little good soft-bill food, and this serves well to administer the colour-food in. Use sweet pepper only. The exact proportion cannot well be given; it depends on the natural height of colour in the bird. But it should not be overdone; it ought never to be necessary to exceed a proportion of one in six, the object being more to yellow rather than red-feed the birds. To get the birds used to it, a commencement must be made with but a pinch or so only, gradually working up to what seems the necessary strength. When mixing sweet pepper with crushed seed (as is done by some fanciers), there is enough natural moisture (oil) in the latter to take up the colour. One esteemed friend of mine uses canary seed crushed in his seed-mill, with a little medium oatmeal and crushed linseed, combining the sweet pepper with this. He prepares it fresh every morning; and this is necessary, as crushed seed is apt to go rancid. He gets a fine colour and gloss on his birds.

"Weaning" Linnets & Greenies.

Peter W.—Greenfinch is certainly the correct name. Green Linnet is commonly used, true, but this bird is not a "Linnet" at all. Neither young Linnets nor Greenfinches present any difficulty to get on to hard seed. The procedure should be very much the same as that adopted with young Mules and Canaries. You should supply seeding shepherd's purse in abundance, and seeding chickweed also. In addition give summer rape seed and sunflower seed soaked in cold water until it bursts and begins to germinate, dabbing it dry in a cloth before offering it to the youngsters. Gradually introduce cracked hemp, cracked and shelled sunflower, and ordinary summer rape, maw, and canary seeds. They will soon get on to the dry seed. See that the soaked seed is always fresh and sweet; if given sour it will kill the birds. Leave a little egg-bread (or biscuit soaked in new milk) in the cage for them to peck at if so disposed; mind it is always fresh and sweet, too. When first offering them water, colour it lightly with Parrish's Chemical Food, and give it in a glass vessel only.

Moulting Mules.

Constant Reader.—You did quite right to keep the young Mules used to eating a little soft-food daily; I always recommend the practice. You will, in consequence, have no difficulty in getting them on to colour-food. A bird that is carefully colour-fed, requires little other preparation to fit it for the show-bench. The procedure is, as you surmise, the same as for Canaries. Many fanciers "sheet down" their birds, but this is not absolutely necessary so long as the sun's rays do not play upon them; a blind over the window (especially a green one) will kill the mid-day glare quite sufficiently. You must see, however, that the Mules have a constant supply of pure cold water for bathing purposes, as the moult draws to a close, and if they do not bathe freely, they must on all suitable days be lightly sprayed. The importance of cold water in producing tightness of feather and bloom cannot be over-estimated. The difference between a free-bathing bird and a non-bather can easily be seen when the moult is over. Give the oilier seeds—sunflower, linseed, and maw—freely as the moult progresses, and plenty of ripe seeding shepherd's purse, and chickweed, also a daily supply of nasturtium flowers if you can get them. The latter help the colour appreciably, and a fancier's garden should always be well stocked with them. The other foods I recommend weekly can, of course, be given for variety, but all the above-mentioned are essential.

A "Rose" Linnet's Nest.

Patsy.—Yes; the bird with the fiery red breast, and red on the head, was the cock Linnet. Evidently he was a fine old male, in full breeding dress. The hen has no red at all about her, and this would be the sober-coloured bird you noted near the nest. I think you formed a mistaken idea of the size, though; the hen is not so very much smaller than the cock, as a rule. You can put a Linnet's eggs under a hen Canary with every prospect of the latter hatching and rearing the youngsters successfully. In fact, there is nothing difficult about it at all, providing the hen is a good feeder and gets proper food. The usual seeds and egg-bread will answer admirably, backed up by a liberal supply of seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed. Note other replies last week and this. If you can mix a few good ant's eggs into the egg-food, in the manner recommended by me so many times lately, so much the better. By-the-way, "Rose" Linnet is a pretty name—much prettier than "Brown." What a pity our little friend does not keep in's gorgeous summer colouring in captivity. I have seen some glorious "Rose" Linnets — real "crimson ramblers" — out in the fields. It was difficult to believe they were our sober-garbed little Linnets of the show season (our show season, at least; not theirs).

Young Nightingales.

Gale.—Young Nightingales moult in captivity at practically the same time as old birds—that is to say, somewhere about the end of July and during August and September. It is a safe rule, however, to expect young birds of any kind to drop into the moult a shade before the older birds. Very late-hatched youngsters (owing to nest robbery, etc.) would form the exception to this rule. You can easily tell when young Nightingales are in their nest feather, for then they are spotted all over. As they moult into the plain adult garb these spots, of course, disappear. As regards the winter, it is true that several of the Warblers have been kept in unheated outdoor aviaries, or bird-rooms through the winter, but our English Nightingale, I am sure, does not relish the cold. In a snug indoor room, unheated, these birds suffer during cold damp weather, and visibly so during hard frost or a spell at a very low temperature. There is no special treatment required during the moult, so long as the bird keeps in condition (or health). It is a safe plan, however, to mix three or four spots of the finest cod-liver oil in their daily food supply thrice a week: oftener if they show signs of drooping. But don't overdo the quantity of oil, or the bird may turn against its food. Get the tasteless oil. Of course, I look upon it as almost unnecessary to say that the moult is the period when the best of food only should be supplied, with insect life in every possible variety.

Song Thrush in the Moult.

Turdus.—Your question is one I dislike to be put to me, for in answering it candidly I am sure that I offend more than a few bird-lovers. I must say, however, that for present-day competition it is well to colour-feed a Song Thrush one wants to exhibit. Of course, it is not always necessary. Some few exhibition birds are rich enough in colour, naturally, for any purpose. But given a well-spotted bird a trifle pale in colour, then by all means invest in some sweet red pepper. But do not overdo it. I like to see the richness of colour enhanced, or brought to a high pitch, but not to see specimens fed almost out of all resemblance to their natural shade. This should be avoided. You should commence giving the colour food about the middle of July—being too early rather than too late. You will need to get the bird accustomed to it very gradually, adding but a mere pinch or so to the daily food supply for the first few days. Gradually work up the quantity until you are giving a tablespoonful of tasteless pepper to every two tablespoonfuls of food—this should be when the bird is shedding its plumage. Dissolve a tiny pinch of citrate of iron in the bird's drinking water twice a week at this time. Also as the bird begins to drop feathers add a little linseed meal (best quality only) to its stock food about a dessert-spoonful to every breakfastcupful, mixing it well. But work up to this quantity gradually; do not start off with it. Do birds like colour-food? Well, this is another "naughty" question. I have a Gray Wagtail at present which will eat sweet pepper neat (without any admixture of food), and he appears to relish it exceedingly.

Brevities.

Loss of Feathers on Head (J. P., Dublin).—You have nothing to worry about, seeing that the Goldfinch is in full song. In fact, I have a bird myself in very much the same condition as your own. The feathers will be reproduced alright at the moult, now so near at hand. Catching him daily to treat the bare place might only serve to upset him.

Siskin-Greenfinch Hybrid (P. R. Kirkby).—Pleased to hear you have had some success. The Siskin-Greenfinch is not a rare hybrid, neither is it particularly difficult to get. A cock bird really good in size, shape and colour is worth from 30/- to 50/-; an example right above the average in these points, and well moulted, would fetch more. Cannot reply by post unless rules are conformed with.

An Egg (Mrs. Machlow).—The egg you forwarded was not worth returning after the post office had done their best (or worst) with it. So far as I could tell, I feel sure it was an egg of the Greenfinch—a bird, as you will know, very commonly kept in captivity.

Mule Moulting (R. T. B., Cymru).—You can do little else beyond patiently wait for the moult to come to an end. Possibly the delay is not such a misfortune as you imagine, for if the Mule had got over it quickly, he might have gone into moult again in a month or two's time, whereas now he will probably go until this time twelvemonth. Get a bottle of Scrubb's cloudy ammonia, and spray him very lightly about every other day with water just clouded by the addition of a few drops.

Skylark Ailing (Marens).—It seems to me the bird is out of order internally. Pity you don't say how you are feeding. Try him with all the live-food you can get; especially spiders. A few gentles and small blackbeetles would also be relished, in additiou to the mealworms. As medicine, give a saline. Get an ounce of sulphate of soda from a chemist, and in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water dissolve as much as will just cover a shilling, using a glass or pot vessel. Repeat this dose after a day's interval on plain water. As regards the Redpoll, I should think it had had a "fit" of some kind.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Birds for Outdoor Aviary.

J. Roberts.—You have comfortable accommodation for about 18 birds, but I would not put the full number in straight away. Get pairs of Zebra Finches, Cutthroats, Spice Birds, Silverbills, and White Java Sparrows. Hang up several cokernut busks and nest boxes, and several of them should breed. Line the back wall and ends with twiggy branches. Supply Canary, white, French, and spray millet seed, cuttlefish, green-food, grit, and water for drinking and bathing. When they have young to feed some kind of soft food should be given; a little slightly damped sponge cake and a few ants' eggs amply meet the modest needs of these few species. If your locality is a northern one, I should advise the provision of a wood and glazed shutter to go before the front of aviary at nights, and also during very severe weather. Ventilate by a few small holes in same near top, and leave about one inch along the bottom exposed; but see that you do not create a draught, as the most robust species cannot stand draught.

A Grey Laying Eggs.

F.B.—Such cases are by no means uncommon; in fact, they are fairly frequent, though it is not often that they lay with the regularity and frequency that your bird has kept up. I should keep a piece of cuttlefish continually in cage, also a lump of old lime plaster, and scatter over sand tray any egg shells you have left from your table. The precautions you have already taken, combined with the above, should reduce the risk of egg binding to a minimum. With many species of Parrots, the hen goes about in a mopy condition and with dropping wings when about to lay, and when this is noticed special precautions should be taken against draught. If the egg is not laid within the usual period, the bird should be caught up and the vent anointed with pure olive oil. If this fails to give relief, it should be steamed over hot water for about 10 minutes, returned to its cage, and left covered up for a short time; usually two or three hours suffice, and sometimes much less, for the bird to get rid of the egg.

What Parrot?

"Arrow."—(1) It is the Rose-breasted Cockatoo, a native of Australia and a hardy species once it has got over the hardships of importation. (2) I must ask you to inform me how you have been treating this bird. How have you been dieting it? If you supply these particulars I shall be in a position to help you. In the meantime diet as per our reply to "T. B.," but omit drugs advised to that correspondent. Simply give for the next week, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking water every second day. Supply the information asked for, and repeat query in full, and more definite help shall be given you next week.

Parrot Breathing Heavily.

T.B.—A general diet of boiled maize is not good for a Grey Parrot; still, you must not stop this suddenly, but as soon as you find it eating freely of the seed mixture mentioned below, gradually wean it from the maize. Mixture: Two parts each Canary seed and oats, and one part each wheat, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds; well mix and always keep a supply in the cage. Also give so as to vary its diet, plain biscuit (dry), ripe fruit, green-food, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), and keep a piece of clean cuttlefish hanging in its cage. Do not give any table scraps, tea, coffee or milk sops, or any kind of animal food whatever. For one day only soak one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into its boiled maize, and repeat dose in three days' time. Get from your chemist the following: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts. Take one teaspoonful of the mixture and two tablespoonfuls of water, and let the bird have only this to drink till the breathing is easier. Of course, supply a fresh portion each day. Also bathe its nostrils (use a camel-hair brush) twice daily with dilated glyco-thymoline. Keep the bird where it will get plenty of fresh air, and yet be out of the reach of draught.

Another Feather Plucker.

W.J.C.—I fear I can offer you little prospect of much improvement: a bird that has become confirmed in this vice for a twelvemonth stands but small chance of being made to give it up again. Bathe the raw part and anoint it with spermaceti ointment. Give it a cooling aperient, say Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful) in its drinking water every third day for a few weeks. Of course, if its voidings should become watery loose the aperient must be discontinued for a time, and Parrish's Chemical Food given instead. I should well moisten its plumage occasionally, and also the bare parts with quassia solution, and persevere with this; but avoid getting the solution into the wound. Diet your bird as to its seed mixture as advised to "D.M.B." in this issue; the other items of your dietary are all wholesome, but what is the bread moistened with? If tea, coffee, or milk, stop at once; and if it is moistened at all, simply let it be dipped in clear water. Keep bird occupied as much as possible; also give it rotten wood, cotton reels, etc., to chew up and play with. Recovery cannot be rapid, but I should like to hear a fortnight hence how the sore place is progressing.

Disappearance of Eggs.

E.W.—Canaries are not always free from blame in this respect when they are kept together. I do not really think the Foreigners you have are responsible for the mischief. I suspect the Siberian Goldie, and also the Linnets and Siskin, especially if they are fresh caught. At the same time remember a cement floor does not render you immune from mice; quite large mice can run through half-inch mesh netting. On the other haud, if your birds are not crowded they ought not to interfere with one another. I can only suggest keeping a watch, and if you notice any of the birds visiting other's nests you will be pretty safe in assuming them to be the culprits. Note: Birds that are quite safe when properly mated are often most mischievous nest robbers as odd, unmated birds, particularly unmated hens. Regret I cannot give you more definite advice, but I have no data to go upon.

Treatment of Saffron Finches.

Interested Reader, P.S.—Canary, white, French, and spray millet, with green-food, an occasional mealworm or other insect, also a teaspoonful of ants' eggs daily, with cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing—will amply suffice to keep these birds fit and thriving. In an outdoor aviary Saffrons usually rear one brood in late autumn each year, but they are one of the species which do not readily change their breeding season, which is our winter; and, consequently, many clutches of eggs are spoiled. However, they are good feeders, and usually rear such as they hatch out. A little of some good soft food mixture (see our advert. columns) must be given when they are feeding young.

Parrot with Sore Mouth.

"Liscard."—Get from your chemist a box of honey and borax; take a small portion of the mixture and wipe out bird's mouth with same twice a day. Use a small camel-hair brush for the purpose and well cleanse it, and use a fresh portion of the mixture on each occasion. Also put 20 grains of chlorate of potassium in its drinking water (one ounce), and give this quantity daily for a week or ten days. Report progress next week, and describe the exterior growths on sides of the beak. Also give twenty drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the beak. The bird should be kept quiet and out of draught, yet not in a vitiated atmosphere. Cage should be kept strictly clean, and its food hoppers scalded out at least every other day. Its bowe's should be kept moving freely, yet not watery loose.

Parrot Husky.

Dawson. If it is only a cold, the remedies you have applied as directed in this column are quite correct. But from the data you give I much fear there is either some obstruction or a growth in the throat. If such is the case it must be attended to by a vet., or the bird sent to the Animals' Hospital. In any case, the treatment you have given will do no harm, and if on examining the bird's mouth you find any small sores, get from your chemist a box of honey and borax, and wipe out the bird's mouth with this twice a day. Use a camel-hair brush for the purpose and keep it well cleansed. Feed as advised regularly in this column, and do not give any table scraps, tea, coffee or milk sops, nor yet any kind of animal food. If you supply me with full details as to how you have been feeding, and you can indicate more of the nature of the swelling, possibly I can help you further.

What Parrakeet?

Tunstall.—Your bird, there is no doubt, is one of the Alexandrine Parrakeets, and apparently a very fine specimen; it is also a talented bird. Of course, ordinary specimens of this bird in fair condition are worth from 15s. to 25s. each, according to condition and market. But a bird in fine feather and able to utter "You'll wake the baby," "I shan't forget," "No fear of that," etc., should be worth anything from 60s. to 100s. Of course, the above figures are subject to the bird's enunciation being clear and distinct. Hope it will continue to do well.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Goldfinch (Postact).—Chronic softening of liver of long standing, followed by recent acute inflammation involving the lungs. I consider it an infectious condition, and any cage occupied by this bird should be thoroughly disinfected before being used by any other bird.

Blackbird (Blackbird).—Enlargement of liver and rupture of bloodvessel of that organ.

Brown Foreign Finch (E. G. Watts).—Chronic softening of liver, recent inflammation, and hæmorrhage.

Young Yorkshire (J.M.).—This bird died of "bird fever," and in all probability your other losses arose from the same disease. Isolation of healthy-looking birds in perfectly clean cages and fumigation with sulphur is suggested. It would be well to study Dr. Clarke's book, which may be obtained from this office.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

Photograph (A. E. Morton).—We are very much obliged to you.

Bird Catching (Well Wisher).—We have not published your letter, for in our next issue or so you will find given all the details you need, along with explanatory sketches. If you then desire to put any further questions, we shall be glad to print them.

Egg-Saving Device (W. Reid).—We have no knowledge of anyone who makes and sells the nest you mention. You might communicate with the sender of the idea.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SUCCESS IN HYBRID BREEDING.

Sir,—I have a cock Siskin (house moulted three times) and a Canary-reared hen Greenfinch (last year's bird) in my aviary, which also contains two cock Goldies, cock Linnet, hen Bullfinch, pair of Redpolls, and three hen Canaries. The Siskin and Greenfinch paired up themselves, and I got one youngster from them out of five eggs. It has come on fine, being now seven weeks old and in clinking condition. According to its colour I take it to be a cock. I may also say I have got two Linnet Mules, and two Goldfinch-Mules from one Canary, but another Canary let four die. I live in the country, and give my birds an armful of shepherd's purse, groundsel, chickweed, dandelion, etc., every morning, and sometimes twice a day. My aviary is 7ft. high, 12ft. long 5ft. from front to back. The Siskin and Greenie have got another nest, and five more eggs.

P. R. Kirkby.

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

Niger Seed Condemned.

Sir,—Mr. Claude St. John says, in last week's Cage Birds, dandelion must be used with discretion. Yes; and the right sort of dandelion gathered with discretion. What I mean is: Mind where you gather it from. I gather what I use grown in the open, with leaves four or five inches long; also I cut down into the root about one inch, as I have found the birds like the root as well as the leaves. Whilst the hen is feeding the young, I shake the root and leaves in clean water and give the birds the root just as it is, after, of course, I have shaken all the water out. Culpepper says that dandelion is of an opening and cleansing quality, and therefore very effectual in obstructions of the liver, gall, and spleen, and the diseases that arise from them. According to that, I want no better green-food for Canaries, if, as I have said, the right sort is gathered, neither rank nor old (tough grown), but the young and tender. I have used it for these last 20 seasons with the best results. I use it up to the finish of the second round; for the third round I use lettuce, the dandelion by then getting old and tough. Water-cress is all right if one could gather his own from a nice clean running brook; the shop water-cress, or forced stuff, I would not use. Some 12 years since there was a great outcry about inga seed. In the spring of that year I gave my hens a little each. I had, up to the second round, no young worth speaking about. The hens went soft and dull-looking. I conditioned them again for the third round (no inga seed this time). I then left them to my wife; I had had enough for one season. I never entered the bird-room for a month or more; in fact, I never asked her how she was getting on with them. Well, about the fifth Sunday morning, she asked me whether I was going to have a look at the birds. At the time a fancier friend had called to see me, so I said to him: "Come on, let's see what the wife has done." (He knew I had not seen them). Well, we got a surprise. She had bred 60 young in that round, and, mind you, all were feathered. I believe it was nine pairs of this same lot which went out to India. From that day to this inga (or niger) seed has never entered my bird-room, nor ever will. My advice is, don't use it for Canaries. Some years after this I read a report of a visit paid to Mr. Barnett, the noted crest breeder. He had been served just the same as myself; hens went soft. He also said, no more inga for him. I use plenty of maw seed. I have always found this good in any way you like to use it. About a fortnight ago I had two hens feeding four young each. On looking in the nest, I found the hen had stopped cleaning the nest. The young would be seven days old. I could see they had got diarrhœa; the nest was wet and dirty. I put them in a clean nest, and hand-fed them once. I put one drop of tincture of iron and quinine on a spoonful of egg-food, and fed the eight young birds once by hand. I also gave the hens four drops of this in their water for three days together. I reared the lot. I always use Parrish's Chemical Food, one teaspoonful to two eggs and the biscuit. I find it a splendid tonic given twice a week while the hen is feeding. I take a bottle to the chemist's and get threepenny-worth each of tincture of iron and tincture of quinine, mixed together. I give three or four drops (no more) to two tablespoonsful of water. I leave it on for one day, then give clean water for three or four days. If I see the hen going slack with her feeding, I give her three or four drops in the water; it soon puts her right.

A. Mather.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

THE BLACKBIRD MAKES PUSSY SORRY.

SIR,—I have just read of a remarkable case of a bird chastising a cat. Near Chelmsford a Blackbird has its nest in the ivy just a few inches below an upper story window. A fortnight ago one of the household cats, reaching down from the sill, scared the mother bird off the nest, and captured one of the young, which was made a meal of. Since then the mother bird has flown at the cat every time she sights her, and alighting on her back, pecks her unmercifully. This happens three or four times a day, and poor pussy's life is made quite a burden to her.

NEW SOCIETY FOR WEST AUCKLAND AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Will you allow me space in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to inform fanciers in the district that a meeting to form a society was recently held at the Talbot Hotel. The long room there has kindly been offered free of charge, and one guinea given for the good of the society, by the landlord, Sergeant Thom, which is an excellent start. It was decided to call the society the West Auckland and District Cage Bird and Pigeon Society. A meeting will be held on Saturday night, July 11th, at 7 p.m., when all fanciers will be welcome and officers will be enrolled.

THE SCOTCH FANCY v. THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Thompson's letter on the above, I beg to say I cannot pass it by unnoticed. I cannot for the life of me agree with him, that the Norwich Plainhead is a superior bird to the Scotch Fancy. I will admit that the pepper-fed Norwich are richer in colour than the Scotch Fancies, but discontinue the pepper and place the Norwich along side the Scotch Fancies, and you will find, in nine cases out of ten, the Scotch fancies are quite equal, if not superior, both in colour and feather to the Norwich Plainhead. I also quite agree with "Old Reekie's" remarks. He was not far out of the way when he said that one pair of really good Scotch Fancies were worth a dozen pairs of Norwich. I am quite aware this will not meet with everyone's approbation, but I really must say I consider the Scotch Fancy the most graceful bird we have, and I have no doubt my brother fanciers across the border will bear me out in this respect. For instance, place a Scotch Fancy (I mean a good one) in the show-cage; watch his graceful movements to and fro, and there you have something to look upon, something to admire, and something which will doubtless oftentimes bring a smile to your countenance. I have kept nearly all kinds of Canaries in my time, but fail to see how Mr. Thompson gives premier honours to the Norwich Plainhead over the Scotch Fancy. I maintain that the "Bird of Circle" is far preferable to the Norwich Plainhead in every respect, but I suppose it would not do for all of us to be of the same opinion. Give me the graceful "Scotchie," which I really admire, and which I now have in my possession. They are equally as good in colour as any non-fed Norwich.

THE SISKIN FOR MULING AND EXHIBITION.

SIR,—This bird, which has been kept for years in cages, not particularly for its song but for its fine plumage and for crossing purposes, has yet to make a name for itself as a parent for choice mules, etc. I believe there will be a great demand for this bird for that purpose before very long, as I know there are several fanciers who are trying for this cross with a hen Bullie. I don't think it has ever been produced. If it has I am open to conviction. Which bird the offspring would be like in its adult plumage, I am anxious to learn. I should hardly think it would be worth the bother to get any young for hand-rearing, as they would be most difficult to get during the autumn and winter. These birds can be got from a dealer quite cheap, and some of these, like most other kinds, are easily tamed, while some are just the reverse. They are very restless until you have thoroughly tamed them. They have the habit of nearly always hanging on the cage-front or wires, these being favourite nesting positions, so that I shall strongly advise anyone who thinks of going in for these birds to get them as early as possible before the end of the year, and get them steadied down to cage life. They have been crossed I know for years with the Canary, not that it improved their song at all, but only to produce a Mule. I believe that in years gone by few really good Mules from the up-to-date exhibitor's point of view were produced. But now we have had the "Awakening," we shall no doubt get something good from this bird. I was glad a short time back to see your expert, Mr. Weston, advising the cross with a hen Bullie. He said he was on "the job," and I hope he may succeed. I thought of this cross as far back as 1895. I had then a good hen Bullie, but could not get the Siskin steady. It might be done with a field-moulted bird but I should certainly like a cage-moulted one tried in connection with this cross. I hope those who are using this bird in any such crosses will tell readers of CAGE BIRDS of their experience so as to stimulate others. These birds I should also like to see exhibited in some of our best shows in separate classes. I wish that the N.B.B. and M.C. would see that classes were arranged say, at the Palace, for most of our British birds which are used for Muling purposes, and also specify that they must be "natural colour." The latter provision would no doubt cause many to enter who would not enter if this were not stated. Whether or not this bird can be improved by colour-feeding I cannot debate.

BREEDING FOR COLOUR: A PROBLEM IN POINT.

SIR,—In your issue of June 20 "Yellow Green" tells of a pair of green Scotch Fancy Canaries producing a clear. Now I should like to tell your readers of an incident that occurred in my bird-room last season. I paired up a green crest cock (sire, clear body dark; dam, green crest, to a green crest-bred hen (sire, green crest; dam, green crest-bred). From this pair I reared one Crest which was almost a clear body dark bird, the dark feathers going a little down the neck. It had also a couple of dark feather sin one wing. Now the funny part was when the Crest moulted; it moulted into a perfectly clear crest, not a dark feather anywhere, and I am rather anxious to see what this year's moult will bring about.

WHAT IS "QUALITY" LINNET SONG?

SIR,—In response to "Constant Reader" as to quality Linnet singing, if you want to know what quality song is, you will have to take great interest in Linnet singing, and it will take you years before you understand the Linnet. I have kept them since a boy (which is over 30 years), and you must not think I can teach you as much in five minutes that has taken me a lifetime to learn. As to Linnets learning from German Canaries, it is wrong, as they would be disqualified; the voice will tell. With regard to the wild bird's song, there are good and bad birds. My advice is to get a good bird that has won prizes. If you really want to learn something about quality singing, you should go as far as Leeds, where quality singing matches take place nearly every week end. You will have to pay a good price for a good bird, and it will teach you more than I can tell you (if really a good one).

T. JUMP.

SIR,—I know some of your readers are waiting for a reply as to "quality" Linnet singing. As a young Linnet fancier, I bought my first good Linnet from Mr. J. Rostron, of Blackburn, and it won me a lot of prizes as a "quality" bird. A good Linnet as regards its song for quality should begin by "scraping," turning into "titing," then "pecing," then "guying," "heavy noting" and "blubbering" and "stops"; that is a good bird as far as quality is concerned. As for the German Canary singing, it has not the same voice as a Linnet. I should like young fanciers to take notice of their birds when they sing. I will give you another way of singing, "reeing" in voices, "widdleing," "shiffling," "jowing," "orring," and lots more good notes they can do besides. The more a bird changes its voice on any of these notes, the better it is. There are birds that have not the same voice as others, and that has a lot to do with quality. Any sort of a bird will do for home singing, but good quality birds are hard to find and cost a lot of money at times. I hope our novices will go and hear more quality contests, and then the good birds will teach them a lot more than we can tell them.

POLLY'S PERSISTENCE IN LAYING EGGS.

SIR,—Can any of your numerous readers say if the following is a common case, as I have not heard of a similar one before? A friend of mine had a young grey Parrot brought to her from Africa. After it had been in her possession about a twelve-month, it became ill, and my friend thought it would die. In the course of two or three days it laid an egg and ever since that time it has repeated the process at intervals. It is ill for a day or two, then lays an egg. This occurs about every three months. It is now seven years old. My friend has quite a collection of pretty creamy-white eggs, and has given some away. She puts some warm covering over the cage when the bird becomes ill until the egg is laid; and it is not long before "Polly" gets quite well again and talks as usual.

THE UNITED KINGDOM LIZARD CANARY SOCIETY.

SIR,—Being amongst my old friends on June 20th, I had many asking me if the United Kingdom Lizard Society was still in existence. I told them I did not know, but that I hoped it was. I would certainly like to know if anything has gone wrong with this society. I notice plenty of shows advertised at which they could hold their meetings. Being a new society, it will need to be kept before the Fancy before it will get many members. What are they holding back for? I am hoping to be amongst the Lizard fanciers and exhibitors next year. I started too late this year. I got my cock birds, but could get no hens, so I have had to leave Lizard-breeding over for another year. Still, I am hoping to be amongst the Lizard fanciers when they call their meetings, and at the shows. That the Lizard men have had a good breeding season is the wish of

THE CAPTIVATING REDPOLL.

SIR,—This bird has of late years become a great favourite with fanciers for Muling purposes. It has for years been kept as a cage bird and there used to be a class for this bird at the Palace shows, but of late years that class has not been given. Why I cannot say, for I believe it used to be well patronised; and I dare say, if the class was renewed it would again take on. This is a great favourite of mine. It is an engaging little bird, and easily tamable. Its various crosses are becoming much admired. I hope that next show season, when the Redpoll-Bullies get more adult, their plumage will attract the showmen and result in their being used more than at present. A full-plumaged bird with its beautiful "namesake" is certainly to be much admired. This bird does breed in some counties of England, so it would be easy either to get some young and hand-rear them, or even to obtain eggs and place them under Canaries; but I hardly think it would be worth the trouble to resort to the latter as the birds would not be so fine or yet so strong as the newly-caught birds. These birds are very easily caught in the autumn, both with the Linnets and by themselves. I know of a friend who had one, and put it out in a trap cage in his garden last autumn. He soon caught several of these birds as they flew over. They are, in fact, about the easiest birds that I know of for catching in a trap cage with a call-bird. If there are any about the district the call bird will soon bring them to the cage and without any trouble they are secured at once. In our district I am pleased to hear that several of them are at present up with various birds for Muling purposes, and I hope to be able to give good accounts of them before the season is past. They can be fed the same as a Linnet when in cages, but they are very fond of nearly all kinds of green-food, which should be well supplied to them, as to all birds, quite fresh, and not too much at a time. They are also very fond of various kinds of berries. It is some years ago now since I first knew the Redpoll. It was then in a small cage, and had to draw up its own seed and water, just as the Goldfinch did. But I am glad to say that it is a long time since I saw either this bird or the Goldfinch drawing up its supply. I do hope that fashion has gone out of date entirely. Not that I believe it was cruel to the birds, for both species love mischief in cages as well as in the open. I think that once a person has had a Redpoll he is never happy without one in his collection. These birds are so well known and have been kept for so many years as cage birds that it is not necessary to give a full description of them, but I strongly advise lovers of British birds to have either a male or a pair in their collection. This bird will readily breed with various species in confinement, but it is only the male bird which is used. In fact, until within the last few years very few females of such as the Greenfinch, Chaffinch, Goldfinch, Linnet, and Bullie were used. No doubt in the future more experiments will be made in this branch. There is yet a large field open for the various crosses. The colours of this bird when it is kept in confinement are, of course, not so good by a long way as those of a fresh-caught specimen.

HYBRID BREEDING EXPERIENCES.

SIR,—Having been a reader of your well-known paper, CAGE BIRDS, for years, I will let you know how I have gone on so far this season. I started this year to try my luck in Hybrids. I paired up a four-year-old cock Chaffinch to a two-year-old hen Bramblefinch. They have built a lovely nest in a cage made out of a Tate sugar box, and laid five eggs. All of these she laid in the nest. I transferred them to a Canary to sit on, giving the Bramblefinch some Canary's eggs to sit on, which she has continued to do ever since. I have to lift her off the nest if I want to look at the eggs, she is so keen. The other pair I have is a Goldie cock and a Greenie hen. First nest two eggs clear, second nest (fortnight later), seven eggs—five fertile, two clear. One I broke accidentally, so I put it as clear. I have the five under Canaries, some of which should hatch this week. In transferring the Bramble's eggs to Canaries, I accidentally broke two, so I have three left, all fertile. I have also about 30 young Yorkshires (25 on the sticks) and three hens sitting, so I think I am doing fairly well. I wish every success to CAGE BIRDS, as it has done me a lot of good, both when advertising and by its reading matter.

Lidget Green. J. LANE.

SIR,—Having read with interest the experiences of novices in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, in the breeding of Hybrids, it might interest some of them to know that I have a cock Goldfinch mated to a hen Bullfinch. My Bullie has built her own nest, laid five eggs in it and has sat on them, but it is rather disappointing to find three of her eggs clear and two dead young ones in the others. But I am going to try again, hoping to have better luck next time.

NOVICE.

CUCKOO'S STRANGE FOSTER PARENTS.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Bell's letter re the above, I may say I had a young Cuckoo brought me on June 6 in a Linnet's nest. This was the first time I ever knew of one in such a nest. It is the more remarkable seeing that the Cuckoos are purely seed-eating birds. They are generally found with Hedge-Sparrows, Robins, Pied Wagtails, Buntings, Meadow Pipits, Whitethroats, and Chaffinches. This Linnet was the only Finch I had ever known which brought up a Cuckoo. But looking over Dradburn's work, I see he mentions the Greenfinch. I may say I am bringing this one up by hand. He was well feathered when I had him, and now is quite a large bird. But he is no nearer feeding himself than when I first had him. I have a fair amount of patience, but to bring up a Cuckoo one wants a lot. He is the laziest bird I have ever had anything to do with, but I trust he will be much better before the mammoth show at Cambridge, as I thought of exhibiting him there.

Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

By THOMAS SMITH.

A Feeding Male Necessary.

A good feeding cock is as necessary as a good feeding hen. The reader may ask, why? That is easily answered. The average hen does her duty faithfully until the young reach the eighth or tenth day; then she suddenly stops. If a quick layer, the eggs are coming again and she hands over the feeding duties to her spouse.

It is at this point that a good feeding male is worth his weight in gold. Many young birds are lost because the hen ceases to rear them. The absolute necessity is to have a well-equipped pair, so that the one may begin feeding when the other leaves off.

In rearing there is every need for continuity. I should perhaps mention another thing: A hen may sicken at any stage and with a good feeding mate, even suppose she should cease to feed at an early period in the existence of the young, the young birds may be saved. Better to save than lose.

Males are liable to flirt with a hen in an adjoining cage, if there is nothing between the cages to prevent them seeing each other. Frosted glass can be purchased at a moderate price and is very suitable for the purpose. Glass put at each end admits a certain light, and, moreover, red mites do not find a congenial lodgment; besides, it is very easily cleaned.

Spare Foster Mothers.

Every fancier should have at hand a few spare foster hens to substitute for any that may turn out bad, or that may break down. They are useful, and where there are too many, a friend will always be ready to take one or two; they are in great demand when they cannot at any price be procured.

The best hatchers have to be found out by testing them. A hen which comes off the eggs occasionally, in my opinion, is the best hatcher; the eggs seem to break freely under her, and if she proves to be a feeder, the young thrive under her. The young ones feather quickly and come to maturity sooner than those brought up by a sluggish hen.

Exceptions do exist, but the hen that only leaves the nest during incubation when nature compels her to, is in some cases a good sitter and a fine foster-mother.

Working Savage Cock Birds.

An odd cock-bird may be so savage that he will all but kill the hen, or keep her crouching in the farthest corner of the cage. If he is good blood, place him in a small cage, alongside of the breeding cage with the hen in it, and partition them from the others. Run him in say morning, noon and evening, and in nine cases out of ten the desired end will be brought about.

Few fanciers realize the benefit which is derived from a close study of the personal disposition of each bird. Were that done regularly, many of the vexations which arise in the second, third and fourth clutches, could be avoided. Where there is a large stock of birds, it is advisable to jot down the little peculiarities which have been observed. The foibles should be carefully guarded against.

When to Remove the Young.

The young generally leave the nest and take to the perches at the age of three weeks. Some hens have laid again by that time, in which case, it is as well to remove the young and the cock into another compartment or cage, and allow him to feed until they can do for themselves, say at the end of four weeks from the date of hatching. Healthy young can do for themselves by that time.

It is preferable to give them a couple of days longer where there is an uncertainty. Birds that are weaned at that age are usually healthy.

Young birds that are allowed to remain in the breeding-cage with the pair, dirty the nests, and spoil the eggs. The cock-bird should be put back in the evening to save quarrelling, and possible injury to the eggs.

The Time for Hatching.

The month of June is, in ordinary circumstances, high-water mark in the breeding operations. If young birds are to be had they should be hatched by the beginning of June, and if old birds do not make an attempt by the end of the month their owners may have to keep them till the next season.

In Scotland Canary exhibitions start by the middle of September, so that it is necessary to have young Scotch Fancy Canaries hatched by the first week in June if they are to compete for the first honours, which are more appreciated than the later ones. June should be the busiest month with the fancier.

In a well-arranged aviary every bird should be busy "improving the shining hours." It is a joy to work when everything goes well, but very little may cause discomfort. The loss of a nest of young, or eggs, casts a shadow, and failure is then written large. Why should fanciers become depressed over these little difficulties? Such difficulties exist to be overcome, and instead of changing the diet, etc., fanciers should continue as before, and the chances are that all will go as merry as a marriage bell.

The cold winds and inclement weather are frequently the causes of hens being bad feeders, of clear eggs, and of young dying; and with the advent of warmer weather there is a prospect of success.

When on the Sticks.

Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries require great care when they come out of the nest. They are liable to go wrong by becoming twisted in neck or body, being very highly-strung in the nerves. When this takes place there is little hope of a cure.

A bird in that condition may move about the cage for years, in (otherwise) a healthy condition, but the probability is that it will never breed. There are exceptions, however, and I have personally known of such birds, of both sexes, which have bred.

The desire for long necks and head well down has, in my opinion, a lot to do with this kind of malformation. If a Scotch Fancy or a Belgian Canary becomes sufficiently wry-necked to keep the head well down, and the defect is not too apparent, it may beat all competitors in its own class and in cup competition. But a winner, sound in limb and body, fit to win and able to perform necessary duties, is the specimen that will command the most money in the market. It takes a smart fancier to discriminate between a defective and a perfect Scotch Fancy Canary, the difference between the two being very fine.

The young should be permitted to remain as long as they will in the nest, and they should on no account be frightened or compelled to leave their cosy quarters. Sometimes the malformation does not take place until the victim is five or six weeks old. In all the experience of the Fancy, nothing equals the depression which befalls a breeder who wakens to find a promising champion twisted, contorted, and marred for life.

Changes in the Weather.

The weather has been sometimes very cold, and this has told severely against breeding in all its varied stages. Changes in the weather, especially coldwards, have a most detrimental effect—the young die, and clear eggs are the rule, and not the exception.

At such a period pairs should be kept back till the genial weather sets in. Should a cold wave pass over in the breeding season, a sharp look-out ought to be maintained over the entire stock. An apparent breaking-down should be checked by putting the invalid on a diet of bread, soaked in boiled milk, and hard-boiled egg and biscuit on alternate days. Five drops of best olive oil should be mixed with the egg and biscuit. This treatment should be continued until the invalid has regained its former strength.

IF YOU ARE SEEKING

an ideal food to mix with your Colour Feed try

and its results will please you.

Being in flaky powder form it mixes readily with all kinds of colour food, and is at once handy, clean, and gives far superior results to egg and bread crumbs.

The following unsolicited testimonials from persons who tried it in practically its experimental stage, speak for themselves:—

PRESTON ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY. October 18th, 1907.

This is to certify that the members of the Preston Ornithological Society have this year during the breeding season, and time of moulting, used upwards of 100 lbs. of your Bird Milk (Woodland Brand) in the soft food of their cage birds, and feel more than satisfied that it is the most suitable ingredient to mix with their soft food. This year our birds are larger, stronger and possess more vigour than ever before.

Signed on behalf of members. W. Haworth, Chairman; W. Lewis, Vice-Chairman; J. P. Leeming, Treasurer; J. W. Clemmson, Hon. Sec.; J. T. Swarbrick, Assist. Hon. Sec.

Broughton, Preston. Dear Sirs, I have much pleasure in writing you that the birds I won with in the Yorkshire section at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908, were fed with bread colour feed, and your Woodland Bird Milk. I used no eggs in my bird room all last season.

I am of opinion that one box containing 1 lb. is equal to 60 eggs; and this is the opinion of my friends in the Fancy.

THE ANATOMY AND DISEASES OF BIRDS.

By J. W. Cutmore.

A Lecture before the Liverpool O.S. on May 19th.

Discussion.

On the conclusion of the lecture the members present plied the lecturer with many questions on various points touched upon during his discourse, which were ably answered. Among the various questions were the following:—

The chairman: Presuming the diagnosis of anthrax to be correct, would it not be dangerous for a fancier to handle birds which had died of this disease, or, in the event of anthrax having been communicated by the cow hair to handle same?—Answer: Decidedly, if there was any abrasion of the skin.

Mr. Hillmen inquired how a hen Canary could "sweat" its young, a bird's skin not being an excretory organ?—Answer: The hen did not sweat (as the term is ordinarily used), but the moisture about the feathers was caused by the condensation of the exhalations from the young birds' lungs, and owing to diarrhœa in the young, the old bird being then unable to remove the excreta when the nest and all that came in contact with it became fouled.

Nesting diarrhœa was also discussed, and various opinions and remedies supplied, Mr. Deacon observing that in such cases he had found crushed cuttlefish beneficial, while Mr. Hales recommended 10 drops of tincture of catechu in the drinking water. The opinion of the meeting was unanimous against putting young birds that were suffering from bowel trouble, either constipation or diarrhœa, from one nest to that containing other young, as in such cases all the nestlings ultimately become contaminated.

Mr. Spinks inquired if the lecturer recommended sitting hens to be fed only on plain Canary seed, saying that this was quite contrary to the methods of poultry fanciers, who invariably gave sitting hens better food at this time.—The lecturer recommended that a little egg food should be given occasionally and not entirely withheld.

On a question of diet for rearing young birds, Mr. Hales informed the members that a Liverpool fancier had reared young entirely on brown sugar and maw seed, with the addition of the ordinary seed diet, and had met with much success.

On a question being put as to whether he recommended the bird-room window being left open at night when the temperature had fallen considerably, the lecturer advised this being done so long as there was no direct draught on the birds.

Mr. Hillmen inquired if there was risk of contamination in allowing birds affected with phthisis or bronchitis to run with healthy stock? Answer: Birds with a tendency towards same in a low condition would probably acquire it. It was only the tendency towards these diseases that was hereditary and not the actual complaint. A question was asked as to whether consumption could be acquired by a fancier from any affected bird, when the lecturer explained that this was impossible, the tubercle being different.

On the question of cow hair for nesting material, Mr. Hales stated that he used manila rope teased out, and moss, others being in favour of moss alone, while others again favoured the administration of dried grass with this, the nest being then porous and well ventilated.

The chairman inquired if it was necessary to supply soft-billed birds with grit for digestive purposes, seeing that they possessed no proper gizzard, the answer being no.

A very interesting debate resulted from the lecturer's very full and lucid explanation of the egg production, and subsequent stages the egg passed through up to the chick being hatched, diagrams and dissected specimens of various species being produced with the reproductive organs and eggs in various stages of development. Mr. Cutmore explained how it was possible for a vigorous male bird to fertilize eggs laid a fortnight or so after the male had been removed from the hen, thus explaining the occasional production of "clear Mules" (Canaries) and dark Mules in the one nest, when both a cock Canary and Finch had been run with the one hen at intervals of the period named. The explanations of the development of the embryo into the young bird were listened to with great interest, the lecturer stating that life began on the passage of the ovum from the oviduct. Diagrams were put in showing the construction of the egg, the embryo lodging up in the yolk of the egg which was suspended from each end of the shell by a membrane, allowing the yolk and embryo to revolve each time the hen turned the egg, thus keeping the embryo nearest to her body.

Upon the conclusion of the discussion, which was carried on much beyond the time usually allotted to the meetings, the chairman proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Cutmore for his very able lecture, which vote was carried with acclamation, thus concluding one of the most interesting meetings enjoyed by the Fancy in this locality for many years.

BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1908 SEASON.

Manchester and Northern Counties O.S.

Although several members' breeding has resulted in an utter failure so far, still the majority have had success, and we are anticipating a good entry at the show.—Geo. W. F. Lythgoe, hon. sec.

Paisley and District N.M.B. and F.B.C.

Our members are having a good season, young birds being very plentiful. One member has 22 Border Fancies, and another has 26 Norwich. Several Mules are reported, and also two Redpoll-Goldfinch Hybrids.—R. McLerie, hon. sec. of the Paisley and D.s. N.M.B. and F.B.C.

Wolverhampton and District C.B.S.

The first round of our members has been fairly good, considering the very severe weather experienced in this district during the early part of the season, which caused the loss of several valuable stock birds. Mr. Willoughby, I am pleased to say, after having had two disastrous seasons, is making up for them this time with a good one; he has 25 grand youngsters (Norwich) on the sticks, and a lot more in the nest. Mr. Weaver has over 30 Norwich of all ages, and many eggs yet to hatch; for quality they will be hard to beat. Mr. Farfield who, I regret to say, has been very seriously ill, has not been able to pay so much attention to his stock, but I hear he has 8 grand Norwich on the sticks. I hope he may make this number into 28 before the season is over. Mr. Millincamp has 22 Yorkshires on the sticks and hens nesting for the last round. I noticed several grand youngsters amongst this fancier's lot that, given a good moult, will make their presence felt in the show season. Mr. Jones had 9 Yorkshires on the sticks a fortnight ago. Mr. Jacquemin has 30 young Rollers of all ages, and Mr. Cadman 9 on the sticks. Messrs. Wakeham, Turpin, and Adey have had rather hard luck from the first round, but are hoping to make up before the close of the season. I have not heard of any Hybrids being bred yet, but quite early in the season Mr. Tonks bred a nice Greenfinch-Canary Mule. The Greenfinch has since made good his escape. Mr. Osborne has a nice young dark Goldfinch-Canary Mule and some good eggs of that cross due to hatch. I myself have 31 Yorkshires, 15 on the sticks and others in the nest. I regret not being able to record the doings of a great number of our members not having seen them lately.—F. Howes, sec.

Some Practical Observations on Insectivorous Birds.

By S. A. SANDY.

A Paper read before the City and Suburban A.C.B., on June 15th.

I should like to say a few words on the question of food. From an article which recently appeared in CAGE BIRDS on the subject of the Nightingale, I fear some readers will be disposed to consider the 'gale a difficult bird to cater for in captivity, but I can assure you from my own experience that such is not the case. If one can be sure of a constant supply of wasp grub, gentles, live ants' eggs, and live food generally, of course there can be nothing better; but as this is an impossibility with fanciers living in London, or, I should imagine, in any of the larger provincial towns, a substitute has to be found that will keep our birds in health and song. I do not hesitate to say that this can be done quite easily by using good, sound, dried ants' eggs, freshly-boiled egg, fine meat meal, and an ingredient that has recently been put upon the market—ground silkworm pupae—the whole well mixed together and damped with some grated carrot. This mixture will keep any small insectivorous bird in health and condition, with the addition of a few mealworms every day when no other insects are obtainable. I had a sample of the silkworm pupae given me some time back and found the birds I then had seemed to be very fond of it, and even the newly-caught ones ate it very readily.

On Keeping Great Grey Shrikes.

Since I last read a paper before your members I have been able to get some practical experience with the Great Grey Shrike, which, although fairly easy to cater for, does not readily adapt itself to captivity. All that is required is a plentiful supply of Sparrows and mice; Mr. Shrike will do well on these. He wants a very large cage, or better still an outdoor aviary to live in, where he can take plenty of exercise, and a bough with a few sharp spikes on it upon which he may be able to hang his food. Mine would take a bird or mouse and pull it on to the spike until it was fixed securely, and there commence to eat it—feathers (or fur) and all. The latter, however, would be thrown up in pellets the size of a large date stone. It was also very fond of beetles and raw beef, but it is advisable to give the beef very sparingly, or the bird will quickly develop fits.

One thing struck me as being rather funny. The Shrike seemed to prefer the birds being first killed, and on one occasion I put in a live Greenfinch and watched for some time. The Shrike did not attempt to molest the Greenie, and the two roosted upon the same bough in the aviary for quite a week, and I had begun to think that Greenfinches alive were rather too much for the cannibal. But one morning I missed the Greenie, and on making a closer examination I saw all that was left of him hanging up on the bough and the Shrike sitting contentedly close by.

I tried to feed the Shrike on a mixture as used for Thrushes with egg cut into fairly large pieces, but it scarcely ever touched it, although its present owner says it has to eat Thrush food now or starve. The Great Grey Shrike is by no means common, being a winter emigrant; but it is rather astonishing how easily a supply of rarities of this kind can "migrate" from the Continent as soon as it is discovered that some particular species is finding favour with the judges. And there is no doubt that a fair specimen of the Great Grey Shrike in good order should about win.

The Red-backed Shrike.

The Red-backed Shrike is, of course, the common species with us, and can be obtained for a very small sum from early May and onwards. The plumage of the adult male is very striking, especially when he is seen sitting upon an outer branch of a hawthorn tree in the spring time. The head is slate-grey, the back reddish-brown, the flights brown, the tail feathers white at their bases, and black on the lower portion, the frontal band and lores black, the chin white, the under parts a pinkish buff, and the bill, legs, and feet black.

It is a smaller bird than the Great Grey being only 7 inches in length, while the Great Grey measures rather over 9 inches. I have kept several specimens, and have not found them difficult to cater for.

They are very fond of the common house beetle and bumble bees, and of young birds, mealworms, large moths, etc. They are not at all difficult to get upon ordinary insectivorous food, but I think the egg should be given sparingly, as I noticed when I had a young one of this species that it quickly got very fat and developed fits, from which it died a few weeks later.

The Red-backed Shrike breeds with us and builds a very large and cumbersome nest, usually in a hawthorn bush, and it is not difficult to discover, as the bush is sure to be dotted over with dead bees, beetles, and young birds: for the "butcher" bird, as he is called, likes to see a well-stocked larder. I have found this bird rather difficult to steady, and I know of one at the present time that has been in the possession of my friend, Mr. Frostick, for over three years, and although it will feed from his hand and has a very roomy cage to itself, it persists in breaking its tail feathers. It has a pleasing song and makes, in my opinion, a very interesting pet, and a useful exhibition bird when perfect. It is a summer migrant, and must, of course, be kept warm during the late autumn, winter, and early spring.

The Red-backed Shrike is not difficult to catch if you use one of the little net traps baited with a blackbeetle or bumblebee pinned back downwards. This seems an irresistible morsel to it, but when you have got your bird in the trap, be careful how you take it out, for you must bear in mind the Butcher Bird has a very powerful bill and knows how to use it when the opportunity arises. It is one of the few of our insectivorous birds that have been bred in captivity. It has been successfully bred by Dr. Gunter, of Kew, whose name I daresay you all know.

There are two other members of the Shrike family, namely, the Lesser Grey Shrike, which is practically a smaller edition of the Great Grey, and the Woodchat Shrike, which is fairly numerous on the Continent, but rare with us. This latter is also very like the Great Grey, but has the crown and nape of the neck a bright chestnut red. It is about the same size as the Red-backed species. I found my Shrikes were not fond of bathing, but my experience in that respect may not be the general one.

The Listless Waxwing.

Another very interesting bird that is occasionally met with on the show bench is the Waxwing. It is a regular winter visitor, more especially in the northern and eastern parts of England, and is an inhabitant of the Arctic regions, where it breeds. It is supposed to visit our shores when the weather is particularly severe further north. Its length is rather over 7 inches, while in general appearance it resembles somewhat the Hawfinch without, of course, the large bill of that bird.

The adult male has the frontal band, lores, and chin black, forehead and sides of the crest chestnut brown, general plumage light greyish brown shading to ash grey on the rump and under parts. The wing coverts are black, tipped with white. The flights are tipped with red wax. The tail is almost black with a broad, yellow band at the end. The bill, legs, and feet are black.

It thrives well upon a good insectivorous food with the addition of various kinds of berries, such as hips and haws, hawthorn berries, etc. It has no song worth speaking of, and I should call it a listless bird in captivity.

The Waxwing, like the Shrike, is a very useful exhibition bird, and makes a very taking exhibit. It should, in my opinion, be colour-fed. I remember seeing a very fine specimen at the Palace a few years back. I doubt very much if the specimens we see on the bench are caught in England, but I don't think there have been so many imported during the last year or two. I remember that some five or six years ago they were very plentiful.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

A MAKESHIFT NEST.

Sent by W. Gurney, 224, Plumstead Common Road, Plumstead, S.E.

Once or twice I have been in a difficulty to find my birds a nest-pan, but with the help of a suitably-sized flower-pot have got out of it nicely. Just take an ordinary flower-pot and in it fix a round piece of wood somewhere about half-way down, and in which you have bored some holes for ventilation purposes. It can be fastened up in the cage in the ordinary way, and the birds take to it readily. One advantage of this nest is the fine grip the birds can get on the ridge round the top. — W. GURNEY.

HOLDER FOR NESTING MATERIAL, ETC.

Sent by F. Munro, 17, Strode Road, Willesden Green.

The holder I send a sketch of is a very strong article, and not easily put out of shape. It saves further a lot of the waste and litter so often seen on bird-room floors. This holder is a close-wire basket, with wider wires at the back (where it fixes on the cage-front) to allow the birds to pull material through. The frame work is made of flat punched bar; the nest is ordinary cage wire, the whole soldered where necessary.—F. MUNRO.

MY CUTTHROAT FINCHES AND THEIR BREEDING.

By F. Brammer.

I have for a long time since been very fond of keeping foreign birds. When I was first introduced to them by reading CAGE BIRDS, I found they were not so very expensive, so I went to the establishment of one of the largest advertisers and bought a pair of Cutthroats and a pair of Nuns. Of the two pairs I took the greater interest in the Cutthroats, and so gave away the Nuns.

When the Cutthroats became settled in their cage I found the hen did not seem very well; she was always going to sleep, although the cock bird was constantly singing to her. So it struck me they wanted more exercise, and my idea was to let them out into the room. This is always a risky business, because it is not easy to get them back again, especially if there are two or more of them. Anyway, I did it, and when I opened the cage door, how they did enjoy it! It was their first fly for a long time I imagined. They soon went back for food and were not frightened when I went near to shut the door. The next day I did the same over again. They soon became quite used to it, and, in fact, began to look for my coming.

The hen improved wonderfully as a result. I put a cokernut shell in their cage and they slept in this, but did not lay any eggs. I then put up another and a larger cokernut husk in the room close to their cage. This they took to at once and slept in. They flew about the room in the daytime, going into their cage for food, which consisted of millet and Canary seed.

Attempts at Nesting.

The hen laid her first egg on Christmas morning while she was flying about the room, and of course the egg was smashed. After that she took to the nest properly and laid three more eggs. She and her mate sat on them for a long time, but they never hatched, so I took them out. The birds very soon made a fresh start.

The cock bird makes or builds the nest, and whenever I blew a feather in the air, he would fly and catch it in his beak. He would then carry it home to his nest. This was very pretty, and anyone visiting us was always interested in watching him.

They sat on a great number of eggs, but all to no purpose. So I made a change and put them back into their cage with their favourite nest. They were evidently very concerned over this, and hardly gave me time to fix up the nest before they were in the cage looking round. They did not mind about my hands, but wanted to see what I was doing to their nest. In the cage they laid two eggs, and then went on "strike." My next move was to turn them into a large packing-case. I boarded half the front with wood and put the nest behind this, so that it might be quite private. I put a wire front (½-in. mesh) with a sliding door on the other half of the front of the box and then covered it with an old mat to keep out the wet. After this I put the packing-case (or cage) on some flats under a wall, where they would be quite private, and only went to attend them once each morning.

The Secretly-reared Youngsters.

They soon settled down in this their new home. One day I heard some mysterious noises, and on going to the cage I found the floor strewed with young birds (four of them) with hardly any feathers on them. When I picked them up they could only struggle a little bit.

I carefully put them back again into the nest and the parents quickly turned them out again; so I knew it was no good. I was very disappointed and left them well alone again. But judge of my surprise when one day I discovered three birds instead of two. While I had been leaving them alone in disgust they had reared up this one bird. He is a fine cock bird, nearly as large as his father.

I again hear mysterious noises, and hope to see some more young soon. If I do get any more I shall extend the cage and give them a flight. From experience, then, I find it is best to leave them to themselves as much as possible. To those who intend to go in for foreign bird breeding, I would say, don't expect too much at first, for the birds seem to like playing about before settling down to rear the young.

Choice of Three Methods.

Now one is ready to begin tuition. The choice of a means of giving the lessons may be limited to three, which may be given preference in the order named, viz., a man or boy endowed with the power of whistling correctly, and with taste; a flute; and a bird organ. Do not attempt too much.

If you can teach a bird to pipe one air perfectly, it is exceedingly better than beginning to try to impart two or more tunes, and failing to get either learnt correctly. Select an easy, short, and characteristic air, and whistle or play it over at frequent intervals during the day, but more especially at morning and night. Whilst the young are unable to feed themselves, always finish up each meal by performing the air several times over, with a pause between each repetition, as soon as the birds have settled down quietly after their meal. Later on, when they are fledged and ready to be placed in a cage, give them regular morning and evening lessons and as many more during the day as time and convenience will permit. At this stage begin each lesson by covering the cage with a light cloth, in order to make the birds settle down quietly, and thus have their whole attention devoted to music.

Each lesson should consist of playing over the tune at least a dozen times, being careful to make a pause at the end each time, and always keeping to the same tune and key. When the birds are well on a diet of seeds, they should be caged off separately, and the same plan of teaching adhered to as before.

At this stage they may begin to try to imitate, and as soon as this occurs, when a bird makes an effort and fails, even if it performs only a few notes, immediately follow its collapse with a correct rendering, and wait a few moments to see if it again makes an attempt. Should it do so, repeat the plan of following up its efforts a few times, and the bird will quickly become interested in the contest, and be incited, and at the same time encouraged to perform.

As before intimated, great patience is necessary. Do not expect too much or too rapid progress. If the birds get a tune correctly by the time they are six months old, they will have done well, and during all this time their lessons must be repeated daily with commendable regularity. Once they are proficient, an occasional lesson will suffice to keep them in form. It is, however, advisable to give a lesson more frequently each year during the moult, in order to prevent the birds losing the air whilst off song.

A Note on Economy.

Fanciers are so frequently being told in these days of the dangers of giving egg-food, and of the absolute necessity for keeping the supply when it is used scrupulously clean and fresh, and making up a new supply two or three times a day, that the novice beginning with only one or two pairs of birds is often discouraged by the tremendous waste which arises when the plan is duly carried out to the letter. He is more than ever tempted either to make up the egg supply fresh each day, or (which is, perhaps, still worse) to endeavour to dispense with it altogether in favour of some preferred substitute.

Now, although some of those substitutes are useful enough in their places, they do not appear to have the same support among the larger breeders as the more old-fashioned and time-worn method of egg-feeding. Perhaps, when stocked for months in the stores of country dealers and retailers these prepared foods fail to do themselves full justice, so that one simple rule which every user of such foods should rigidly adhere to, is to buy them direct from the maker, and thus ensure their always being sweet and fresh.

But it is the would-be egg-food advocate, or rather the one who prefers to stick to egg-food and take the risk of its not being kept so fresh as might be desired, that this note is designed to assist. If the simple plan given in detail below is faithfully carried out, there need be no fear whatever about the freshness of the food, and nothing save the white of the egg need ever be wasted even when only a single pair of birds is being catered for.

First, procure a well-made tin with a close-fitting lid, large enough to hold from three-quarters to a pound of the finest-ground oatmeal. There are plenty of such tins in which grocery goods are packed to be obtained, and some brands of cigarettes are put up in hundreds in boxes which, when cleaned, are admirable for the purpose. Fill the box with nice sweet and fresh oatmeal, and keep it always in a cool, dry place. This is all the stock-in-trade one requires to prevent the waste of egg. If the yolk is new taken out of a hard-boiled egg without being broken and buried an inch or so deep in the finely-powdered oatmeal, it will remain perfectly sweet and fresh for some time—certainly longer than one egg will be required to last, even for one pair of birds with a newly-hatched brood.

The writer has put this method to a practical test for some time, with the most satisfactory results.

For Example.

Let us take for example a hen from which the cock has been removed, and which has just hatched a small brood of say two chicks. The yolk of an ordinary-sized fowl's egg will last her at least two days; and to adopt this plan you will boil your egg and allow it to stand until it is quite cold. Break and remove the shell, so that you can afterwards cut round the middle of the white with a knife and take the yolk out unbroken. It is not absolutely essential for the yolk to be kept perfectly whole, but as by doing so there is so much the less surface of the yolk exposed to the air, it is, at any rate, advisable to avoid breaking it if possible. Having got out the yolk, cut off about one-quarter of it and immediately bury the rest in the tin of oatmeal. Scoop out a quantity of the meal with a spoon, drop in the yolk, and replace the oatmeal on the top of it; then give a gentle rap or two on the bottom of the tin to make the meal settle closely all round the yolk. Always make a point of placing the yolk in or returning it to the tin as soon as possible, so that it may be exposed to the air as little as possible.

When a second portion is required, take the yolk out of the meal without breaking it, or scraping off the layer of meal that will be found adhering lightly about the surface. Cut off the required portion of yolk, shake off all the meal that will drop off easily on to the piece of yolk you are going to use, and follow the same procedure in returning the remainder to the tin, and also in taking off a fresh supply each time..

It will thus be seen that a small proportion of the oatmeal is used in the food each time, so that the quantity in the tin gradually diminishes. This is more beneficial than otherwise, besides indirectly serving the useful purpose of keeping the bulk of the oatmeal sweet and fresh, as that which is being slightly damped by absorbing the moisture from the surface of the yolk is being continually used up whilst fresh.

When Damping is Necessary.

Of course, when following up this plan the usual amount of bread crumbs or powdered biscuit is mixed with the egg. Twice a day is sufficient to prepare fresh food for the first week after the young are hatched, as they consume but a very small quantity of food up to this age. After this, if one's time and convenience allow, it is as well to give a fresh supply three times a day—i.e., at morning, and midday, and in the evening, just before the old birds begin to feed up the young for the night. If making up three fresh supplies each day is too great a tax upon one's time, there need be no serious misgivings upon the matter of giving it fresh twice a day.

The day after the egg is boiled it will be found that the outer surface of the yolk in the tin is dry, and a thin, dry crust begins to form. This is no detriment at all, and is due to the oatmeal absorbing the moisture from the surface. But when one goes to mix the food it will be found to mix up drier than the birds care for it. This must be remedied by the addition of a drop or two of water.

A tiny crumb of bread, soaked in water, and the surplus water squeezed out of it is quite sufficient, if well blended amongst the food with a fork. Do not attempt to mix it with the fingers, or it will more likely be made into a pasty mass, which no bird appreciates. Another point to bear in mind is that the food should never be made sloppy and wet. In this condition it is much more risky for the bird than when given just crumbly moist

*Hardly Likely.

A foreign bird was observed hopping about a shop at Tiverton, Devon, and the only explanation which can be given of its presence is that it must have come amongst some bananas, a truck of which had just been delivered. The bird is a small, brown one, with a bright, red beak, bright amber face, and tail feathers tipped with crimson.—Sent by G. Wainford (age 11), 45, Bengeo Street, Hertford.

*Canaries Reared by Greenies.

Just outside Malton there is a Greenfinch's nest, and having some young Canaries which were being sweated and were consequently dying, a lover of birds exchanged them for three Greenfinches out of this nest—just for curiosity's sake. The young Canaries are now doing well, are 10 days old, and will soon be ready for caging by themselves.—Sent by H. W. Middleton (age 13), 21, Wright's Yard, Malton.

The Courageous Robins.

Sometimes Robins choose very queer places for their nests. A pair of these birds once began to build their nest in a tall plant that stood in the hall of a gentleman's house. This was not a very convenient place, so the people of the house pulled down the nest. Then the birds chose a still more curious place. They began to build in the cornice of the drawing-room, and brought in pieces of moss and leaves. Of course this would not do at all, so the nest was removed once more. The Robins however, were not to be beaten, so they began to make a nest yet again, and this time they selected a shoe that was lying on a shelf in the dressing-room. There was no objection to this, so they were allowed to go on until the nest was finished. When it was done it was found that the shoe was required by its owner, consequently the nest was taken carefully out and placed in an old shoe instead. The Robins did not seem to mind the change at all. They filled up the under part of the shoe with oak leaves, and very soon the eggs were laid and hatched.—Taken from a weekly contemporary and sent by Elliott Tilley (age 11), 84, Station Road, Borsby Hill, near Halesowen.

"CAGE BIRDS," 154, FLEET ST., LONDON

The Yellow Bunting.

Whenever we go across fields—by wood land or hedgerow—the song of the Yellow Bunting is now frequently heard, and where these bright coloured birds are at all plentiful the music is incessant, for no bird is a more constant performer. He will sing through the whole of a hot summer's day when other songsters are quietly hidden in the shady depths of the wood, or seeking shelter from the scorching heat on the leafy side of the hedgerow. When caged, his singing becomes somewhat monotonous. The constant repetitions of the same notes, ending a long, drawn-out "zee," without any variation, prevents this bird from being classed as a desirable cage bird for song alone. But out in the open it is different. There we have the continuous hum of the country side, the passing insects, the rustle of the tall grasses, and the swaying of the trees, with their thousands of tiny leaves—noises almost unheard because so familiar; but these, with the summer breeze, break up the song of the Bunting, carrying part of it away, so that at times we are only conscious of the singing of a bird which attunes so well with the natural surroundings of the hillside, the breezy downs, or sun-scorched fields. The home of the Yell Ammer is an interesting find, not so much on account of its architectural beauty (for the bird is simply the builder of a neat cup-shape nest with a somewhat untidy exterior), but because the eggs always claim more than passing notice. They are of a light, purplish tint, streaked and spotted with dark purplish-brown with a few underlying grey markings. The dark streaks are as though someone had taken a pen filled with purple brown ink and scrawled all over the eggs without any idea of regularity. This peculiarity has acquired for the bird the name of the "Writing Lark," a localism which still clings to it in remote country places. These dark markings vary considerably. In some clutches they are broad and bold, in others finer, interlaced with delicate tracery in endless confusion. But whatever the character of the markings, they all have a family likeness and are easily recognised.

Marriage among Birds.

As a rule our larger birds pair for life, but the majority of the smaller species seek fresh partners each season.

The Busy Martins.

Where the water-carts sprinkle the dusty roads, leaving puddles for a time in the hollow places, the blue-black House Martins, with long, fluttering wings, crowd to collect mud for building. Working in the early morning they wait until the last layer is dried with the heat of the summer's day, before adding more to the structure. So busy are they that at times one is almost able to get within an arm's length of the little crowd.

The Red-backed Shrike.

The Butcher Bird, or Shrike, is now a conspicuous object in certain localities in the south. He has somewhat the habits of the Flycatcher. Choosing some elevated perch he waits patiently until the winged creatures upon which he feeds pass by, and fluttering out he gives chase, returning again to his position. If his haunt is invaded he flies to some prominent point and eyes the intruder with bold, defiant manner.

Catching Birds on Hooks.

Sir F. Banbury, member of Parliament for the City of London, introduced to the House last week a bill to amend the Wild Birds' Protection Act. The principal clause makes it an offence for any person to take any wild bird by means of a hook or similar instrument, and Sir Frederick, who on this occasion was cheered from both sides of the House, explained that it is meant to stop a cruel practice which obtains in some parts of the country—Cornwall was mentioned particularly—and to which Mr. W. H. Hudson, the well-known ornithologist, has recently called attention.—The Bill was read a first time.

Bird's Nest Under Fire.

Among the thousand and one peculiar situations which birds choose for their nidification purposes, the colour-sergeant-instructor of my company has come across one which is worthy of interest, writes T. B. Harden, D.C.L., etc., Captain, 5th Bn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, in the "Military Mail." I refer to the nest of a Blackbird, placed completely under fire and within a few inches of one of the targets on our rifle range. Five eggs have been hatched "mid shot and shell," and the youngsters will soon be ready to fly. How the nests and its precious contents have so far escaped the leaden hail, scores of bullets having passed over and on all sides, is as wonderful as the pluck of the old birds in "sticking to their guns."

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping. That volume is

and this year it has made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

Such Marvellous Value has never before been offered.

See what You Get for Your Money.

Coloured Plate.

An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramblefinch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

Calendar.

A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"Work of the Year."

A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"Washing and Preparing Birds for Exhibition."

Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries."

A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many exeellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"Pairs Matched for Breeding."

A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"The Breeding of Hybrids."

An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"The Keeping of British Birds."

A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"Some Easily Obtainable Foreign Birds.

An account of some pretty and hardy species, with information on their caging and feeding.

"Review of the Exhibition Year."

Every breed of Canary, together with Hybrids, British and Foreign birds, has its progress on the show-bench during 1907 dealt with by leading judges, specialists, and experts, and the names of the principal winning exhibitors are given.

"The Diseases of Cage-Birds."

A feature in itself worth the whole cost of the volume. Diseases and accidents are described, and the best medicines and methods of treatment stated in simple language, and very fully and completely. It will save you many valuable birds.

"Glossary of Terms."

The curious terms used by fanciers are fully explained. Reference to the alphabetically-arranged columns will at once tell you the meaning of such expressions as jonque, leafy feather, mooning, rowing, and the like.

In addition to these features will be found a

Directory to Cage-Bird Clubs, Associations and Societies, with particulars of subscriptions, etc., list of Officials and Secretary's name and address.
Directory to Prominent Breeders and Exhibitors of Cage-Birds.
Directory to Judges of Cage-Birds.
Standards and Scales of Points for Canaries and British Birds.
Useful Postal and other information.
Directory to the Bird Trade.
Ruled Cash Account, etc.
Six full-page Illustrations on art paper, and numerous other drawings.

ALWAYS USE OUR
DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending th same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

WILLIAMSON, GEMMELL & CO.,

Clifton House, 146, Lovely-lane, Warrington, Lancs., May 30, 1908. Messrs. Williamson, Gemmell and Co., seed merchants, 263, Argyle Street, Glasgow.—Gentlemen, — I am in receipt of the supply of cage bird seeds which I ordered on the 26th inst. I am pleased with the quality. Allow me, gentlemen, to say that I have bought this kind of seeds for my birds now for over four years from most seed merchants, but never before have I been able to get the quality of seed you consigned to me; in fact, the quality exceeded my expectations by at least 25 per cent. In conclusion, you may account me as another customer enrolled on your books for my future seeds, whilst you continue to favour me with such quality of seeds.—I am, gentlemen, yours faithfully, A. BOULTON BISHOP.

MANNINGHAM C.B.A.

A first feather show was held on June 27th at headquarters, Mowbray Arms, Lily-street. Competition was very keen, 103 birds being staged in eight classes. The quality of the exhibits was of the very best, and some of them with a good moult should be heard of again. Special for best bird in show went to Messrs. Ackroyd Bros., for a Cinnamon marked Buff. The same exhibitors also gained most points in show. A good muster of fanciers attended during the afternoon, and commented upon the keenness of the members. Special mention should be made of the gift class, which was got up as a means of subscription for a wreath for Mr. M. H. Robinson, thirteen birds being given. After these were judged, they were put up for auction, and realised £2 12s. 9d.—an excellent sum. The judge was Mr. J. Wilman (Shipley), who gave full satisfaction.

GLOUCESTER C.B.S.

The first Young Bird Show of the season was held at Headquarters, the Ram Hotel, on June 25. It proved a great success. Four classes were provided, all for Norwich Plainheads. The entry totalled 42, and the quality on the whole was most excellent, several birds of superlative merit being benched. Mr. Wasley led off with a good win in clear yellows, and followed this up by capturing all the prizes for clear buffs with a clinking trio. Mr. Houghton's winning trio in marked yellows were another nice lot. All the aforementioned were birds that would be hard to beat, and were worth going a long way to see. The exhibits were well staged in a good light ,and were looked after by several willing hands. The hon. sec., Mr. J. Houghton, had all nicely arranged, and everything passed off without a hitch. Several of the most prominent breeders unfortunately could not stage any exhibits owing to the bad results of the breeding season. The awards were made by those old-time partners, Mr. J. H. Payne and Mr. F. Mansfield.

HARTLEPOOLS C.B.S.

Another very successful nest feather show of Norwich Canaries held on July 1st in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms. Four classes were provided, and some very promising youngsters were put down. The competition was keen. After the judging a lively discussion took place and proved very interesting to visitors. Mr. E. Woodhead judged.

ROTHERHAM C.B.S.

Annual nest feather show held on June 27th, in St. George's Hall. Considering the bad season, many fanciers had hardly any birds to show. The entry, however, was a record one, and there were some grand young ones on show. Winning birds in each class with a moult should do well for their owners. Messrs. Oakes, Bagnell, Brotherton, and Stringer did well in the Yorkshire section, while Messrs. Turner and Bagnell staged some of the best Norwich ever seen in Rotherham. In the novice class Mr. Watson showed a clear Buff Yorkshire, which, in our opinion, will be the catch of the season. Messrs. Thompson and Hinchcliffe showed some useful youngsters. The attendance was good, many fanciers being present. Mr. Webster judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction.

HAWICK O.S.

The first young bird show was held June 20th in the Drumlanrig Hall, Drumlanrig-square. There was a good turn-out of young birds, nearly forty cage birds being on view. A good feature was the splendid assortment of British birds. Mr. Wm. Bell judged cage birds satisfactorily. The management are to be congratulated on the acquisition of a hall of their own, and as they intend running a show every month during the summer it is hoped they will have the support they deserve. The secretary, Mr. Amos, assisted by a hard-working committee, had everything well in hand.

Third annual open young bird show was held on July 1st, at headquarters, the "Duchess of Devonshire," Lavender Road, Clapham. The exhibits totalled 130, and the quality was exceptionally good. There was a great improvement in the novice classes. Mr. F. Easterling, the secretary, had everything well in hand, and was most courteous and obliging.—Messrs. F. C. Allen and W. P. Lewis (stewards) had the cards up in good time. Mr. J. Rohson judged.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

The City and Suburban A.C.B. held its young bird show at headquarters on July 4th. Once again the members were responsible for a very fine display, no fewer than 183 exhibits facing the judge, Mr. Robson, and so even in quality were they that in many instances he had difficulty in separating them. The birds were very nicely arranged, and the visitors many, the room being filled all the day with well-known fanciers, and interested friends. The Norwich Plainheads were a grand lot, and a lovely youngster, shown by Messrs. Cooper Bros., secured the silver cup for best young bird. The points cups were credited to Mrs. Page and Messrs. Francis and Wynn. Other specials were won by Mrs. Page (2), Mrs. Morrison (2), Miss Shephard (4), and Messrs. Cooper Bros., Hawes, Hart, Lathleiff, Prance, Offord, Allen, King, Saytch, Warwick, G. Morrison, Curry, Wynn, and Easterling. The medal for second best young bird went to a splendid Yorkshire put down by Mr. J. Hawes, very lengthy, typical, and neat. This exhibitor staged other nice specimens, and that veteran fancier, Mr. H. Davis, together with Messrs. Easterling, Allen, Lewis, King, Morrison and Menheuett, also brought out some grand birds. This section was an excellent one, though the same remark applies to the Norwich Plainheads, in which Messrs. Cooper Bros., F. J. Martin, A. W. Curtis, Hart, Marley, Wheller, Hamlin, Lathleiff, and Knight carried off the bulk of the spoil. The Crests and crest-breds were not numerous, but Messrs. Offord, Prance, and Dickinson had out nice specimens. There were several really good Mules on view, a lady breeder, Mrs. Morrison, carrying off the first prize in the young Mule class. For good British and Foreign birds, the shows of this society have a high reputation, and we do not remember a better display than that provided today by Messrs. Francis, Adamthwaite, Morrison, Curry, Pile, Marley, Robbins, Easterling, Goodall, Page, and Wynn, with Mrs. Page, Mrs. Pile, Mrs. Morrison, and Miss Shephard, to whom fell the leading awards. The latter fair fancier took the chief prize in the Foreign class in addition. The condition and staging of the exhibits were admirable. The management was once again in the hands of the secretary, Mr. V. Wynn, and the great success achieved once again evidenced his fitness for the task. Help was ably rendered by Mrs. Morrison, Mrs. Page, and Messrs. Curtis, Hawes, Head, Offord, W. Page, Sanders, and Shepherd. There was one unfortunate incident, viz., the disqualifying of two birds, shown in the Mkd. Norwich class by Messrs. Cooper Bros., for alleged staining.

CARMARTHENSHIRE C.B.S.

First table show of cage birds held at the Plough Hotel on July 1st. It proved a great success. There were a good many birds in the three classes, and quality was exceptionally fine. Mr. D. Jones judged Canaries, and Mr. Hy. Tohr the rest.

CANARIES: 1, 2, Bevan. BRIT.: 1, Thomas; 2, King-Morgan; both excellent Goldfinches. MULES: 1, Lloyd; 2, Bevan.

LEICESTER C.B.S.

The annual young bird show was held at headquarters, Hare and Pheasant Hotel. The judge, Mr. H. Dickens (Pailton) got through his work in a very masterly manner, and his placing of the awards gave every satisfaction. The entries came up well, and showed a great improvement, some grand birds being on show and staged in the pink of condition. There were some very tempting offers about, but the owners did not seem to care about parting with their birds in most cases; certainly, some of the birds should give a good account of themselves later on. Within two minutes of the placing of the last awards, the catalogue showing the awards were printed and ready for the visitors; this smart bit of work was greatly appreciated.

SKELMANTHORPE C.B.A.

The members held their annual First Feather Show in the Band Room on June 27th. A few real gems for type and quality were staged, and will no doubt do well for their owners during the show season. A small timepiece was given for most points, which was easily captured by H. Lodge, who took three firsts and a fourth in open class. Eight classes were provided. Competition was fairly strong in the clear and ticked classes, but the marked birds were not so good. Mr. George Bray officiated as judge, and gave every satisfaction.

LONDON AND COUNTIES O.A.

A successful young bird show was held on June 27, at the "Coat and Compasses," Euston Road. A large number of fanciers visited the exhibition. The staging of the birds was excellent, the birds themselves being seen to advantage. The Norwich and Yorkshire sections, both well patronised, contained birds of great merit, type and quality, besides colour, being very noticeable. Cinnamons were a really fine show, Mr. Handt securing all the prizes. The British birds came in for a deal of admiration, seeing they were in such smart form, especially the Goldfinches. The arrangements for the show were in the capable hands of Mr. R. J. Pretty, who had everything in ship-shape form. Mr. W. Shakespeare judged, his placings of the awards meeting with the satisfaction of all.

CLUB REPORTS.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

On July 1st Mr. H. Smallcombe gave an interesting lecture on British Birds' Nests and Eggs. It proved very instructive to all present. On account of the time, Mr. Smallcombe had to condense his programme somewhat. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to him and to his son.—W. H. Manley, hon. sec.

CITY OF DUNDEE AND DISTRICT N.M. AND B.B.A.

The monthly meeting was held in Doig's Rooms on July 1, Mr. Jas. Howie presiding. The principal business was the consideration of the request of the Dundee, Lochie and Broughty Ferry O.A. to amalgamate with us. After considering the various points submitted by the committee of both associations it was agreed that both should amalgamate and form one association; also to give ten classes for Scotch Fancies at the Annual Show in Nov., and the name of the association will be the City of Dundee and District Cage Bird Society (Amalgamated).—Alex. Miller, sec.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A meeting was held at headquarters, Spencer Hall, on June 26, when our vice-chairman, Mr. Ward, ably presided. Mr. F. Easterling gave us a lecture on "Colour-Feeding," which was listened to very attentively. The lecturer told us of his experience in breeding for colour. This, he said, must be done if we wanted to be successful. He advised us as to the best birds to use. The green blood, he said, must be a prominent feature in our rooms. He also advised the purchase of the purest peppers, as this was by far the best way of getting colour. Afterwards the meeting was thrown open for questions, and these were able answered by the lecturer. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Easterling. Two new members, Messrs. Green and Grummitt, were nominated for membership. The society is now in a flourishing condition, new members being added to the roll each month. We are holding our first show of young stock, British and Foreign Birds, on July 11.—W. Reynolds, sec.

LANCASHIRE CANARY ASSOC.

Meeting at Littleborough on June 27th. A large number of our members turned up. After visiting the Littleborough C.B.S. Show, some splendid birds being on view, a credit to the Society, we proceeded with our business. Mr. F. Steeple, of Oldham, was the chairman. Show patronage: We selected a number of fixtures which we shall pass at our next meeting. The design of club medal was next discussed, and it was decided that we select as the model the Coppy given in "Cage Birds' Chart" of June 20th, and approved by Mr. Compston, of Macclesfield, it being considered amongst our members an ideal Lancashire Coppy. The secretary will send a copy of same to the makers of our medals, we having decided to have a standard medal, so are going to the expense of having a special die struck for same. We hope to have an impression to put before the next meeting. Owing to our desiring to have as large a bird as possible on the medals, we have discarded the Plainhead, it being our opinion that this would set it off better. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman brought a very pleasant meeting to a close, after which we spent a short time with our Littleborough friends.—Wm. Adams, Hon. Sec.

OPEN NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUB

Meeting of committee held July 4th. Chairman, Mr. D. Sunderland. Applications for patronage submitted, and the following selected:—Newcastle, October 23rd, judge, W. Vardy; Bradford City, October 31st, judge, H. S. Naylor; Rochdale (Good Intent), November 7th, judge, H. W. Battye; Sunderland, November 20th and 21st, judges, Roe and Cameron; Harrogate, December 5th, judge, J. C. Barnes; Eccleshill, December 12th, judge, J. Robson; Halifax, January 22nd and 23rd, judge, W. Vardy. Secretary instructed to invite further applications for patronage, owing to the clashing of dates, and the same judge judging several shows. Sub-committee of the following members: Messrs. J. Wilcock, F. Hammond, A. Haigh, D. Sunderland, and Secretary appointed to consider and select further applications for patronage. Allotting of specials and prizes as follows:—Champion Section: For most points (three highest birds at each show to count), throughout the season, (1) marble clock and bronzes, value £4 4s.; (2) second most points, tea urn value £2 2s.; (3) third ditto, pair of oil paintings on opal, value £1 5s.; (4) fourth ditto, dress piece value 10/6; (5) fifth ditto, special by Mr. Brotherton. Novice Section:—(1) For most points, tea urn value £2 2s.; (2) second ditto, goods value 10/6; (3) third ditto, copper kettle; (4) fourth ditto, cruet; (5), fifth ditto, briar pipe and case; and Mr. Carl's special prizes of: 1st prize £1 5s.; 2nd prize, £1; 3rd prize, 15s., for 1st, 2nd, and 3rd most points respectively, gained by an amateur or novice of the O.N.P.C. Proposition carried that no member or members exhibiting as novices shall be eligible to compete for champion specials. Printing of rule books, etc., left in hands of sub committee. Amendment: That block of Norwich Canary received from Cage Birds be accepted, and printed in rule books. Vote of thanks to chairman for presiding passed.—O. Mitchell, Hon. Sec.

'CAGE BIRDS," 154, FLEET ST., LONDON.

OUTINGS.

Kilmarnock C.B.F.S.

Annual trip took place on June 27th, the destination this time being Doon Hoot. The company numbered about 20. Couples and families left Kilmarnock in brakes, at about 10 o'clock, and reached Doon Hoot by about 1 o'clock, when tea was served out by a few of the ladies, to the satisfaction of all. All of us could well do with a day off at this time of year, and we enjoyed ourselves. The weather put on its best behaviour. The scorching sun was working havoc on most of us after three or four hours. Another tea was served to the company, and it was now time for our return drive to Kilmarnock. Mr. Hutcheson then proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the committee for the trouble they had taken in carrying out another successful day's outing, and called upon Mr. J. Johnstone for his favourite song, which was accompanied by Mr. J. Dunsmuir, and violin. Mr. H. Frain gave his favourite in "A." "The Airts the Wind can Blaw," which was enjoyed by the company very much. A good many were very sorry to leave for home which was reached shortly after 9 o'clock. Everyone was highly satisfied.—R. McCaw, Secretary.

Bury and District C.B.S.

The annual "ramble" took place on July 5th. Glorious weather prevailed throughout the day, the conditions being ideal for a ramble over Ashworth Moors. A fairly good number of members assembled in Market Place, at 2.30 p.m., and the party boarded the 2.45 car to Jericho. From there, they walked leisurely along, relating each other's amusing incidents. Very soon the party were climbing the Birtle Hills, from which a good view of the surrounding country was obtained, and a very refreshing breeze added greatly to the comfort of the Ramblers. After a good walk, the slopes down to Ashworth Valley were reached. This valley, by the way, is acknowledged to be one of the prettiest spots in the neighbourhood of Bury. Its appearance on this occasion fully merited the distinction. Leaving the open fields for the well-wooded valley, where there was ample protection from the sun's rays, was a change duly appreciated by the members, judging from the exclamations of satisfaction which were freely given. So agreeable were the conditions here, that a halt was made, and a rest of about half an hour was indulged in. As might be expected, the topic of conversation was the young bird show, which was to take place on the following Saturday. The members were quite pleased with the results of the breeding season, and the committee anticipated a successful show. Having arranged for tea at the Chapel House, the journey was continued, the hostel being reached about 5 o'clock. Tea was nicely served, and thoroughly enjoyed. About 6 o'clock the journey was continued to Rochdale, via Norden. A pleasant day's outing concluded with a visit to the headquarters of the Rochdale Society, the party reaching Bury shortly after 10 o'clock, by train. It is proposed to arrange a bowling match between the Bury and Rochdale Societies, at an early date.—F. E. Holden, Secretary.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE

THE Open Norwich Plainhead Club held their meeting to allot patronage on Saturday last, when a good number of applications were brought forward, but in consequence of the rule that a judge must not officiate at more than one of the shows held under their patronage, several had to be passed, leaving three shows open for future arrangement, which is to be undertaken by the sub-committee. The prizes were also arranged for competition, and very valuable they are. Quite a boon is expected in the Norwich Fancy during the coming season.

YORKSHIRE County B.B. and M.C. holds its meeting on August 8th to give out the patronage of the club. This is giving societies a month's time in which to study the matter at their meetings, and they will be wise to remember what a great attraction these classes are to the visitors, casual and otherwise.

MANNINGHAM and Bradford City Societies take a little relaxation from the general routine by indulging in a game of cricket today (Saturday). The city men will be minus their champion stumper, Mr. Pollitt, who is now in Canada. After the match a supper will be partaken of at the headquarters of the Manningham Society, which, if up to the usual standard of mine host of the Mowbray Arms, will be as the Yankees say, all O.K.

GUISELEY, Yeadon and Dis. Society had a grand members' show on Saturday last, no less than 60 birds being staged. This with a membership of only 22 speaks well for the enthusiasm of the fanciers in the district. They hold two shows per year and give £1 10s. from the society's funds in prizes for the most points gained by 4 birds at each show.

FRIENDS who would like to hear Mr Fred. Hammond speak on things other than those connected with the Fancy, have opportunity of doing so by attending the Gt. Horton Primitives' Young Men's Class on July 19th, he being booked on that date to read a paper before the members and friends.

TWITTERINGS.

The Gt. Horton O.S. Young Bird Show is to be held to-day (Saturday), at the "Butchers' Arms." Mr. J. Holroyd, the sec., will judge.

Kindly note that I have removed from 11, Lansdowne Terrace, Hull Road, York, writes Mr. T. Boyle, to 3, St. Martin's Lane, Micklegate, York.

Going to Colour-Feed? Why, certainly. Then get Ramsden's Peppers and don't worry. They are the best in the world and colour to perfection.—(ADVT.)

Owing to a slip of the pen, writes Mr. B. Brunskill, sec. of the Darlington C.B.S., our half-day show was stated to be due on July 4th, instead of July 11th.

I have resigned the secretaryship of the Neath and Dis. F.A. Show, writes Mr. W. R. B. Richardson, and Mr. Drury, of Wind Street, Neath, has taken over this office.

A Young Bird Show is to be held to-day (Saturday) in connection with the Watford and Dis. C.B.S., at the Conservative Hall, Clarendon Road, to which fanciers are invited.

Two young Greenfinches were staged at the recent City and Suburban Young Bird Show, which had been hatched and reared from eggs taken on the occasion of the annual country ramble!

I have been a reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Wm. Pinchin (Marske-by-the-Sea), from its commencement. I have to thank the paper alone for my knowledge about birds.

At the last meeting of the Carmarthenshire P.P. and C.B.S., it was decided, writes Mr. Fred King, the hon. sec., to hold the first open show in the Assembly Rooms at Carmarthen, on November 5th.

Messrs. A. Cook and Co., the well-known basket manufacturers, have removed from 25, Waterloo road, London, S.W., to more convenient and central premises, 39, Gerrard Street, London, W.

Mr. Bull's lecture on "Birds I have kept" is postponed from 16th to 23rd July, on account of clashing with L.P.O.S. young bird show, write Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni, hon. secs., Dulwich O.S.

Kindly note that I have resigned the secretaryship of the Dewsbury and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. W. Charlesworth. Mr. N. Rayner, of 15, Granville Street, Dowsbury, has been appointed in my place.

I must thank CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. A. Woodward (Leyton), for my successful advertisement therein. Up to the present I have disposed of 56 orders from all parts of the world. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

The Bristol C.B.S. British Bird Table Show will be held on July 18th, at headquarters, writes Mr. W. H. Manley, sec. Five classes are provided, and entries can be made up to 3.45 p.m. The judge is Mr. F. Buckland.

We note that the City of Dundee N.M. and B.B.A., and the Dundee, Lochie and Broughty Ferry O.A. have decided to amalgamate, and will henceforward be known as the City of Dundee and Dis. Cage Bird Society (Amalgamated).

Messrs. Wrigglesworth and Son, of 56, Stonegate, York, send us a sample of the colour-food they are offering fanciers this season. It should command a ready sale being rich and bright in colour, finely ground, and reasonable in price.

The annual statement of accounts issued by the Matlock and Dis. P.P. and C.B.S., shows a balance of £4 on the year's working. Over £6 was collected during the year by the members for the purpose of wiping off the deficit on the previous year's show.

Owing to trouble with his teeth, necessitating painful dental operations, that well-known British bird enthusiast, Mr. C. Prior, finds himself reluctantly compelled to postpone the lecture promised the City and Suburban A.C.B. for Monday next, July 13th.

My advertisement in CAGE BIRDS of July 4th, writes Mr. S. G. Quelch (Ilford), brought so many replies that if I had answered them all I should have had to employ a secretary. I hope your readers will accept this explanation. There is not another advertising medium like CAGE BIRDS.

West Stanley C.B.S. First Feather Show will be held at the King's Head Hotel, Stanley, on July 25th, when Mr. W. J. Taylor (Newcastle), will judge, writes Mr. Matt. Mason, the sec. We have fixed our annual members' show for January 9th, 1909, with Mr. Shepherd (Newcastle), as judge.

The Garston B.B.A. have removed their headquarters to Miss Albright's, 59, St. Mary's Road, Garston, writes Mr. A. Wilkinson, the hon. sec., and it is hoped our changing will be the means of making our monthly meetings better attended, and also result in an increase of membership.

At the radius show in connection with the Penketh, Sankey and Dis. G. and C.B.S. to be held at Penketh on July 25th, there will be 17 classes for cage birds (including four for novices), 10 of which are for nest-feather birds. It is hoped this section of the show will not suffer for want of support.

The Highgate, Hampstead, and Dis. C.B.S holds its first Nest Feather show to-day (Saturday), in the Spencer Hall, Spencer Road, Dartmouth Park Hill, N.W., with Mr. G. Gardner as judge. The members are hoping for a good attendance of fanciers, to make their initial effort a thorough success. We understand there is likely to be a nice lot of birds staged.

The Nightingale, it is reported, has been heard throughout recent weeks at Knaresborough (Yorkshire). The songster has usually opened its concert at 11 p.m., and closed between 3 a.m. and 4 a.m.

Permit me a word or two in favour of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, writes Mr. W. J. Stagg (Birmingham). It contains, I should say, everything that one can wish to know about birds, and is well worth the money. It is just the thing for novices.

The Watford and District C.B.S. has issued a very compact and neat book of rules, which contains an excellent programme of events for the 1908 season, including a novelty in the way of a visit to the South Kensington natural history museum. The hon. sec. is Mr. W. Quantrell, 47, Market Street, Watford.

We have engaged the following gentlemen to judge at our annual show on October 3rd, writes Mr. John Ewing, sec. of the Dalkeith and Dis. C.C.:—for Scotch Fancy, Mr. J. Dalgleish (Leith); for Border Fancy, Mr. A. Gilchrist (Coldstream); and for Norwich, Mr. Thomas Knight (Edinburgh).

Our committee have elected Mr. W. Mundell, of Bradford, to judge at our open show on January 1st and 2nd, writes Mr. F. W. Bradley, hon. sec. of the Millom and Dis. C.B.A. We are hoping to have a good entry. We are also holding our First Feather Show in the Central Hall on Monday, July 27th.

Under the auspices of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.S. there promises to be a fine show of young birds to-day (Saturday), at the Avondale Hall, Landor Road, Clapham, also a grand lot of British and foreign birds on view, Messrs. Maxwell, Frostick, Sandy, Vale, and other noted fanciers being members. The show opens at 5.30 p.m., and Mr. G. E. Weston is officiating as judge.

In view of the Olympic Games at the Stadium, it is interesting to recall the fact that at the last Olympic Games, which took place at Athens in 1904, every cycling event was won on a Rudge-Whitworth bicycle. A good many Rudge-Whitworths will be ridden in the cycling events on the 15th and 18th inst., at the Franco-British Exhibition, so there is a possibility of history repeating itself.

The Luton Cage Bird Society hold their annual young bird show at Wardown this year, writes Mr. E. Cherry, the sec., in connection with the local Charities Fete on Wednesday, July 15th. The Charities Committee are paying the society a good sum as they think it will be an extra attraction. The birds will be shown in a separate tent. There are numerous other attractions and visitors will have plenty to see for their money. Last year the show was visited by 25,000 people. The Luton society is to be congratulated on their good fortune, as what has been a loss in previous years promises now to be a decided financial success.

The Bath fanciers undoubtedly did a bit of business in the right direction a few weeks ago, by extending their radius to 15 miles, write Messrs. Tristem and Taylor (Bristol). Proof of this was seen at their monthly meeting recently held, when 17 new members were enrolled, to the satisfaction and pleasure of the elder members of the society. Strange to say, out of these 17 members we find 16 are cage bird fanciers, and all belonging to that "happy little band," the Bristol Cage Bird Society, which has done much to encourage this particular fancy this last few years in the West of England. With this infusion of new blood, the cage bird section at Bath young stock show on September 24th, should be the leading feature of the show.

A Boom in Borders.

I hear, writes "Wee Gem," that a well-known south country exhibitor has paid to a Coldstream breeder £12 for a nest of 5 young Border Fancy Canaries in their nest-feather. I wish him luck.

"Open" Norwich P.C.

Owing to the clashing of shows applying for the patronage of the Open Norwich Plainhead Club, and the same judge judging several shows, the committee desire further applications from societies desiring their patronage for the following dates: week ending Oct. 9th and 10th, Oct. 17th, Nov. 14th, Dec. 19th, Jan. 9th, Jan. 16th. All applications, along with judges' names, to reach sec. not later than July 21st.—O. MITCHELL, 13, Lodge Terrace, Bowling, Bradford.

A Pleasant Surprise.

The result of the voting in CAGE BIRDS' Essay Competition came as a most agreeable surprise to me, writes Mr. J. B. Waterman (Dulwich), as I expected to be nearer the bottom of the poll than the top. I should like to tender my sincere thanks to all those readers who so kindly voted for my essay. I may say I have received congratulations from all parts of the country, Ireland included, which proves what a large circulation CAGE BIRDS must have. I beg also to tender you my sincere thanks for the painting which you have kindly forwarded to me as the chief prize. Mr. Norman's picture is indeed superb, and I am delighted with it. The painting will be given an honoured place in my home, and I only wish I had a couple of Yorkshires as perfect as those depicted.

HOW TO MAKE LIGHT BUNS.

By using Eiffel Tower Bun Flour the most inexperienced person can make light Buns and Cakes with certain success. Try a 1d. packet.

Yorkshire Canary Club.

Will secretaries of societies desiring the patronage of the Y.C.C., and who have not already done so, kindly send in their applications before August 1st, along with judges' names, and date of show?—JOHN GREAVES, sec., 279, Hollings Road, Bradford.

The N.P.C. and S.N.P.C. Contest.

The contest between the Norwich Plainhead Club and the Southern Norwich Plainhead Club for the 1908-9 season, will be held in the South of England. This was decided on July 4th last, by Messrs. J. Robson and G. E. Weston, who by request of the respective clubs met to settle this matter by spin of coin, the "toss for choice" favouring the southern society.

"A Model Coppy."

The picture of a Lancashire Coppy given on CAGE BIRDS CHART in our issue of June 20th last, has, we hear from the secretary of the Lancashire Canary Association, Mr. W. Adams, been adopted as the model of that club, and is to be engraved on the new standard medal about to be struck. This bird was, he writes, "considered amongst our members an ideal Lancashire Coppy."

Yorkshire County B.B. and M.C.

Will secretaries of societies desirous of this club's patronage make application for same before Friday, August 7th. I have extended the time so that each society may have an opportunity of discussing the matter; open to societies in Yorkshire. Where possible, give judge's name, and date of show. To any fancier interested I will forward all information as to membership, etc.—W. R. MYERS, hon. sec., 23, Ingleby Place, Bradford.

The S.N.P.C.

The Southern Norwich Plainhead Club's year book and balance-sheet for 1907-8 come to hand, and from the latter the club seems to have had a most prosperous year's working, a sum of £5 2s. 8d. remaining in hand, as against £2 6s. 1d. the previous season. A progressive programme has been arranged for the 1908-9 season, the following shows having been allotted patronage:—Champion section: Plymouth, Oct. 20th and 21st; Dulwich and Peckham, Nov. 5th and 6th; Hastings United, Nov. 10th and 11th; Swindon and District, Nov. 26th and 27th; Horticultural Hall, Dec. 4th, 1908; L. and P.O.S. National, Feb. 5th, 1909. Novice section: Bristol C.B.S., Oct. 22nd and 23rd; Hastings United, Nov. 10th and 11th; Wimbledon, Nov. 17th and 18th; Swindon and District, Nov. 26th and 27th; Horticultural Hall, Dec. 4th, 1908; L. and P.O.S. National, Feb. 5th, 1909. Breeders of the Norwich Plainhead in the South should send their names for membership to Mr. F. S. Matthes, sec., 34, Rotherhithe, New Road, S.E.

SENSATIONAL DISQUALIFICATION AT A LONDON SHOW.

A happening of a sensational nature marked the Young Bird Show held by the City and Suburban A.C.B. on Saturday last, July 4. When the judge, Mr. J. Robson, reached the second-class (champion section) for Norwich Plainheads, any variety except clear or ticked, two birds arrested his attention, and he felt it necessary to apply a test to them. Four officials witnessed this done, and as a result it is alleged that artificial colouring matter was removed from the plumage, and the character of the marks on the bird's plumage completely altered. One of the birds had a dark mark on the cheek, behind the eye, and the other was marked on the thigh, the assumption, of course, being that these were put there to make the birds eligible to compete in the marked class. "Disqualified" tickets were at once put on to the cages containing the exhibits implicated.

Reference to the catalogue showed that the two birds were being exhibited by Messrs. Cooper Bros., of Notting Hill, W., very well-known in London as highly successful exhibitors of Norwich Plainheads at metropolitan shows, and members of several local societies. They had, in fact, taken the cream of the prizes at the present show, their birds winning first, second and third in the Clear or Ticked class, and first and highly commended in the Marked class (the one in which the disqualified birds were staged). They won several specials in addition, including the silver cup for best young Canary in the show.

Early during the evening, one of the two partners in the firm of Messrs. Cooper Bros. came into the show-room, and the dramatically tense feeling that gripped the spectators as he looked round the aisles and discovered the fatal cards in the wires of the two show-cages, can be better imagined than described. We understand that he afterwards admitted the "marks" had not been bred on the birds, and that it had been done (we give the statement for whatever it may be worth) in order to keep a promise made to the secretary to enter a certain number of birds, and of which they had not the requisite number with marks on them

Naturally, the happening created considerable excitement amongst the crowd of fanciers present. We understand a special council meeting of the City and Suburban Society has been called to deal with the alleged staining and consequent disqualification and the situation arising out of it.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

No. 221.

A CHEAP AND HANDY NURSERY.

Sent by A. Williams, 6, Willow Grove, Southport, Lancs,

I enclose a sketch of a cheap and handy nursery cage, which I hope will be of use to your readers. The total cost comes to 1d. (for wire and hooks). Get a "Monkey Brand" soap box from your grocer (which I get free), carefully knock the bottom out, and save the wood for strips. Then cut the box down so that it will fit on the cage front, nicely between your seed boxes and drinkers, and leave it about 9ins. high. The wood to carry the wire parts should be 2½ins. by ⅜in., both back and front, and on one side allow for the slip of wood for cleaning purposes. On the side with full slip, wire with ⅜in. spaces, the other side with ½in. On this latter side leave 4ins. at right hand for door. Make a neat framework for door out of strips of wood, which you can wire as other portion. To fasten door in, insert a piece of wire in bottom, leaving ¼ inch projecting for letting into the front, and at the top fasten with a thin nail. On the side with ⅜ wire put two small cup hooks for hanging on to front of breeder, so that it comes level with breeding-cage door. Put a perch across from side to side so that young can perch, after being fed, out of reach of the hen. When completed it makes as good and cheap a nursery as you could wish for.—A. WILLIAMS.

No. 222.

A USEFUL NEST-PAN HOLDER.

Sent by J. Chadwick, School House, Butt Lane, Talke.

I think readers of CAGE BIRDS will understand my sketch. The idea is to prevent the cage backs from being made dirty with the droppings from young birds in the nest. The back is made of a piece of wood half inch thick and 6 in. by 4 in. wide, and cut to shape as shown in sketch. A small screw can be put in back of cage to hang it up where required. The wire, which is an ordinary piece of cage wire bent to shape of nest bowl, can be fastened on to the piece of wood by means of three small staples, as shown in sketch. Over top of the wire you will afterwards hollow out the piece of wood to let the rim of the nest-bowl go in to keep it firm in the wire ring. I think fanciers will find this nest-holder easy to make. It can also be cleaned whenever one changes the nest. I have got the same in use and find it very serviceable—J. CHADWICK.

Birds and Thunder.

The Blackbird is reported to be the only bird that sings just previous to a thunder storm. When the atmosphere is heavy and "thunder is in the air," most birds seek the shelter of the woods and remain silent. The Golden Bill alone sings, but only in a soft and subdued manner.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mules and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Parks and Lake Aviculture—Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. M.B.O.U., &c. Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Samples of Seed.

Eat-tat.—Of the seeds No. 1 is very small, but quite sweet and good, and appears to be well ripened. Its only fault is its very small size. No. 2 is about the same size, and quite sweet, but does not seem quite so well ripened, and the sample contains some empty husks which have the appearance of having been emptied by mice. No. 1 is the better of the two. As to whether they are in reality Spanish seeds I will not venture to say, believing as I do that it is utterly impossible for any man to tell by examining the seed where any given sample is grown. So long as you get a good, fair-sized, clean, sweet, and well-ripened seed, it does not at all matter whether grown in Spain or in South America. The colour sample contains a large amount of colour, but much of it seems to come from hot pepper, and judging by the stains on the paper I should imagine it contains more oil than I care about. There was a recipe for a colour-food in last issue. Look up these replies and you will find it there.

Shell-less Eggs.

Thos. Burns.—I have no clear recollection of having lately answered a query of yours, so I presume the advice you have followed is what you have seen advised to others. You should have cut out the advice you followed and sent along with your letter. However, I do not think you will do much good with the hen which lays shell-less eggs so profusely, and as the breeding season is now rapidly drawing to a close the best thing you can do with her is to place her in a good, large flight-cage where she can get plenty of exercise, feed plainly, and mainly on Canary seed, with a liberal supply of green-food until the moult, when you may begin to give a little more soft food if you are going to colour-feed her. I would rather advise you, however, to forego colour feeding, and feed the bird on a plain diet right through the winter, and when mating her up next spring add a pinch of crushed cuttlefish to the egg-food each time you give any, and every second day add twelve drops of chemical food to the drinking water. You must, of course, give a regular supply of gritty sand, and a flake of cuttlefish in addition.

Roller Sneezing.

A Reader of "Cage Birds." Fenton.—As you say the bird is in moult you must not expect it to retain its full singing powers. Indeed, unless this is its first full moult it will probably cease singing altogether when the moult gets in full swing. The sneezing and shaking the head as you describe are not uncommon when a bird is in moult, and is doubtless due to the bird being more susceptible to changes and variations of temperature. You must see the bird is not exposed to any draught, and that there is no very striking difference between the day and night temperatures. Keep cage quite clean, and free from red mites. Stop the hemp, and give instead a pinch of maw every second day, and twice a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, in which well mix two drops of cod liver oil emulsion each time whilst the bird is in moult. In the drinking water for three days add twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil. Shake well together. After this give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight.

Hen Throwing Out Young.

"Whittington."—If the hen's claws are much overgrown, as your letter seems to suggest, this is almost certain to be the cause of the young birds being thrown (or "dragged," which is the more correct term) out of the nest. The young get entangled with the claws whilst the hen is on the nest, and are accidentally carried out when she leaves the nest to get food. To avoid such accidents you should always examine both the claws and back when first pairing up the birds each year, and trim them if they require it. You may trim them now, but be careful not to overdo it, and make them bleed, as a little thing will sometimes cause a hen to "go on strike."

Why Should They?

"Thornhill."—The why and wherefore of Rollers being fed on Canary and rape seed instead of a more elaborate mixture of seeds given regularly are simply that the common experience of all practical breeders teaches them that it is the best for them. In Germany, where the singing powers of a bird are even more highly regarded than with the majority of English breeders, a diet of mixed seeds is still more objected to than with us; and as the essential feature above all others in their birds is singing powers, this seems a fairly good proof that the birds would not "sing as well on mixed seed given regular." You may, I think, take it that these astute breeders who have made the Roller's powers of song what they are would not have dropped a diet of mixed seeds had this in any degree added anything to the bird's singing abilities.

Young Bare of Feather.

A.C.D.—The reason your young birds were so bare of feathers, and you found the feathers in the nest is simply that your hen plucked them out and placed them there. She was probably wanting to go to nest again before the young were old enough to leave the nest, but some hens seems to pluck out of sheer awkwardness. As the young have now left the nest, and you have separated them from the old birds, there is nothing else you can do. This was the best course you could adopt. Still, as the young are only three weeks old I must hope you separated them in such a way that the cock could get at them to feed them through the wires of the partition, as the young would not be able to feed themselves properly. If another brood is hatched give the hen a regular supply of chickweed or lettuce, and watch her closely when the young are getting nicely feathered, and if she commences to pluck them place the young, nest and all, in a nursery cage and hang on the wires of the breeding cage in such a position that the old birds can comfortably feed them through the wires.

Bird Moulting.

"X.Y.Z."—You do not mention the age of the bird, but I think it quite likely the bird is dropping into an early moult quite naturally. If you are quite sure it is not exposed to any cold draughts I should say this was certainly the case. In either case I would let moult follow its natural course now. A staple diet of three parts Canary to one part summer rape is best. In addition give a pinch of maw seed every second day, once a week a few grains of linseed, and three times a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or egg-food. Every day give a little green-food—chickweed, lettuce, dandelion, groundsel, or plantain stalks. Keep it free from draughts and chills, supply gritty sand in the cage regularly, and nothing else will be required, save, of course, a constant supply of clean fresh water. 2. The sight of another bird bathing is the best inducement to bathe you could give your bird which totally ignores the bath. Failing this, wait until you see him bathing his head in the drinker, then remove the drinker, sprinkle a few drops of water over the bird, and put in the usual bath full of water, when it may go to it at once and complete its ablutions. If your saucer is a white or pictured one, perhaps the bird is afraid of it. Try it with a plain darker-coloured earthenware bath.

Aviary Questions.

"Boyce."—1. I take it the aviaries are three feet wide and five feet high, and not vice versa. In that case each one would accommodate from 20 to 25 birds, the size of a Canary, when no breeding was attempted. For breeding, three cocks and six hens would suffice to stock it. It would not be necessary to have as many cocks as hens. 2 and 3. In the second aviary, which you would reserve for pleasure, I should keep either British or Foreign birds to contrast with the Canaries. Canaries kept for singing only are best kept in cages. The queries appear to belong to another section. 4. Young birds bred this year will commence to breed themselves next spring. Speaking generally, their age will be from nine to twelve months. I prefer them always to be not less than the twelve months. 5. As to whether the birds would do well in a position where there is not much sun, being shaded by a dwelling house, depends entirely upon local conditions and circumstances. The description seems to imply a position due North, and this would certainly be a bad one in the winter. The birds might succeed well enough for the next few months, but I would not say the position was a suitable one without a more intimate knowledge of it.

A Chronic Invalid.

A. Brookes.—Am not quite sure whether I have deciphered signature correctly. The bird has certainly undergone enough treatment to cure a number of ordinary invalids, so she must be a rather difficult subject to tackle. Still, as there are many more besides yourself interested in the case and watching its progress, here's a course of treatment which may be more successful, and, perhaps, help you to achieve distinction. As a staple diet give Canary seed only. Each day give a liberal supply of green-food, either chickweed, tender young blooming heads of groundsel, or crisp young dandelion or lettuce. Give one or other of these, or a spray of two or more of those which you may be able to get. Once a week give half a teaspoonful of dry rape, and twice a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with which well mix two drops of cod liver oil emulsion once each week, and on the next occasion add to it a pinch of gold of pleasure seed. Limit it to this diet for a month. In the drinking water for the first week give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and a piece of extract of dandelion the size of a small pea every second day. Stir until the extract is all dissolved. In the second week give five drops of sulphuric acid each day, and after this twelve drops of the following tonic every second day for a fortnight, with pure water on the alternate days. To make the tonic get two pennyworth of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine from a chemist, dissolve it in three tablespoonfuls of sherry, add one tablespoonful of glycerine, and shake together. Shall be glad to hear result at end of month, enclosing this reply if any further advice is wanted for the bird.

A Variety.

"Ireland."—1. Have no record of longest time Canaries may be bred from, but cases of birds breeding successfully for six or eight years are by no means uncommon; ten years is more rare, but, I think, is not a record. For the majority from four to six seasons is about the measure of their usefulness. 2. The best age for mating birds is from one to two years for small or medium-sized breeds, and from one and a half to two and a half or three years for the largest. A Norwich of about one year old, for instance, should be mated with a bird one season older—that is, from eighteen months to two years old; or a Lancashire or Crest of fifteen to eighteen months with a bird from two and a half to three years old. The best stock is I believe to be produced during the second or third season of any given pair. All these points, however, are so intimately associated with the health and stamina of the "individuals" that it is impossible to lay down any rule. 3. If you mean H. W. B., 33, Scarr, Lockwood, Huddersfield, Yorks., is what you want. 4. Yes, I have heard lots of times of the old birds mutilating their young by nibbling off the beaks, legs, etc.; and even if they completely devoured a day or two-days-old chick, it would hardly be as bad as when a hen plucks all the feathers from the backs of a brood a fortnight old, and leaves them all raw and bleeding. I think your suspicion that the old birds devoured one chick out of two and are continuing to rear the other carefully is altogether wrong. Had they so maltreated one they would have served both alike. In all probability, what really happened was that the hen accidentally dragged out the chick when leaving the nest, and the bit of dried skin was doubtless the bird after it had been dead some little time.

Flighty Hen and Baby Food.

Sluh.—1. Am sorry I cannot give any definite opinion, as I have never even seen the food in question, and I cannot therefore presume to venture upon an opinion. But if it is mainly composed of malted farinaceous meal, as I fancy most of these foods are, I see no reason why it should not prove quite successful in this direction. If any of your acquaintances have put the food to a practical test for rearing young birds, perhaps they can relieve you of the doubt by telling you of their adventures. 2. Your experience with the hen which starved her brood to death is, unfortunately, not very uncommon. You might have saved the brood by giving them to the other hens that were feeding well, and whose young were about the same age. As it was her first brood there is a fair chance she may feed and rear future broods. It is getting late to mate now, but if she has had only the one brood this year, and is anxious to go to nest at once, you may allow her to do so. But if she has had more than one brood, do not allow her to mate again. Very glad to hear of your success, and that it is solely due to the knowledge gained from CAGE BIRDS.

Recipe for Colour Food.

Young Beginner.—There are a number of excellent colour foods on the market now which you could quite safely use as you obtained them. To make up a stock of your own get a pound of tasteless red pepper, two ounces of natal, and four ounces of soft moist sugar. Mix and work all thoroughly and completely together. You may add one or two ounces of the purest salad oil, and blend it well together with the mass. As a rule, however, I do not much care about the addition of oil, and if there are any signs of oil having been added to the sample you purchase, do not add any more. Store this in an air-tight tin or glass jar, until required for use. To begin with, add a teaspoonful of the colour to a small teacupful of egg-food, and gradually increase the quantity to two heaped teaspoonfuls of colour to the same quantity of food, and continue giving this strength until the head and neck are moulting, when you must again gradually reduce the colour to the original amount and finish off with this strength. Observe the utmost regularity in giving the colour food daily, and in the proper quantity, and always see that the colour food is blended and mixed with the egg-food as perfectly as possible.

Young Bird Laying.

Thos. Black.—Assuming there was no possibility of error or mistaken identity on your part, it is a very remarkable circumstance for a six-weeks-old Canary to lay an egg. It would, I imagine, establish a record for precocity; at least, as far as I am aware. It is to be hoped, therefore, you have all your facts and data above suspicion or reproach, and incontestable. But, seriously, I am strongly inclined to think that it is either a case of mistaken identity, or someone may perhaps have been working off a practical joke upon you. Were these young birds in a cage by themselves, or in a flight in which there were other birds of various ages? And are you the only person who has access to them? It would be interesting to know just what evidence there was of this particular bird having laid the egg. I have this season had a young bird less than a month old, which, after being fed by its parent, would turn and pass on a scrap or two of the food to a younger nest-mate; I have also seen it give bits of food it has picked up itself. But to lay an egg at six weeks old knocks this into a cocked hat.

A Cannibalistic Hen.

M.A.E.—It is just a little beyond me to give a reason for your hen obstinately refusing to feed two broods of young and biting off their claws. Many of these hens appear to have quite lost all their natural instincts, and there is no accounting for their idiosyncrasies. If I had had the management of this hen I should have tried the experiment of giving her a few mealworms each day. I do not venture to say what the effect would have been, but it is an experiment I believe to be well worth trying when one has a hen of this kind, which cannot be made worse. Apart from keeping the hen for experiment's sake, if you have any bent that way I should strongly advise you to discard her altogether for breeding. The chances of doing good with her are too remote to be worth consideration.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Linnet-Bullfinch Hybrids.

Lewisham.—I don't want to discourage you, but must point out that you do wrong to assume that the eggs are certain to be fertile because you have seen the hen Bullie and cock Linnet in the act of pairing. The latter is essential to fertile eggs, it is true, but any hybrid breeder of experience will tell you ruefully that it doesn't by any means always spell success. Couples will pair and pair again, yet still produce only clear eggs. It is a good sign, however, that your hen should build her own nest, and lay in it. If the eggs prove fertile when examined, I certainly advise you to transfer them (for rearing purposes) to a well-tried feeding hen Canary. Your hen Bullie is evidently an exceptionally well-disposed bird, but it is very doubtful if she would successfully bring the young to maturity. As regards feeding the young, I must refer you to the reply given "Miss Ross" this week. By-the-bye, if you hatch any young, and can't get any hen to feed them satisfactorily, you should remember that it is not at all difficult, providing the feeding can be attended to regularly, to bring them up by hand. Bullie Hybrids being easy subjects. It is troublesome, but far better than losing them. Use the ordinary moistened egg-food, with a good saltspoonful of Plasmon powder (from any good grocer or chemist), well stirred into each tablespoonful. It rears splendid young birds, whether hard or softbill, delicate or otherwise, as I have myself proved to the hilt this season.

Rearing Mules or Hybrids.

Miss Ross.—I will outline you my own methods of feeding, which I have often given in the past, and which bring me a thoroughly satisfactory measure of success. Give the hen, to feed with, canary and summer rape seeds, and lightly cracked hemp seed, with a little shelled sunflower and some maw seed. Offer seeding green foods, such as chickweed and shepherd's purse, freely—but strip off all coarse leaves. If you cannot get this, give young lettuce and watercress leaves—but not freely until the youngsters are three or four days old. She may also relish a little soaked rape. Don't give these things all at the same time, but offer them at various periods through the day—nothing like variety to induce hens to "pack" their babies. Egg-bread, made by well mixing two crushed Osborne biscuits (or equal quantity of stale bread crumbs) with the yolk of a hard-boiled (ten minutes) egg, and a saltspoonful of Plasmon powder, must of course also be freely offered. Mix in half the white, too, when the young are four or five days old. When the Mules commence to feed themselves it is a very mistaken policy to leave off soft food as "soon as possible." The egg should be gradually left out of their diet when they are three weeks old or so, but certainly not the soft food. Give bread and milk sop (or bisenit and milk), well sprinkled with maw seed, and with a good pinch of Plasmon powder mixed amongst it, freely each day. In addition offer canary and maw seeds, soaked summer rape, and lightly cracked hemp. A few crushed sunflower seeds should also be thrown in daily, increasing the quantity as the birds get older, and gradually discontinue the milk sop and soaked seed, giving occasional feeds only. A few groats occasionally are relished, and a little coarse oatmeal; but the above "menu" is full enough for all practical purposes. Some fanciers, I know, will not give young birds green stuff after they have taken them away from their parents. But this I consider a huge mistake. I don't believe, mind you, in stuffing them with lettuce, watercress, and the like. What they want, and what is extremely beneficial to them and conducive to their successful rearing, is a free supply of the "seeding green foods," if I may use the term, meaning the seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's purse, grass, groundsel, plantain, and the like, especially the two first-named. But don't gather it off dusty roadsides; and strip off all large, coarse leaves.

Muling Matters.

A. Wilson.—It is generally assumed that some lack of vitality in the germ is the cause of the embryo dying during the later stages of incubation. It certainly seems odd that one bird should hatch and be reared, and the others die in the shell. Still, this frequently happens, even with birds in a state of nature, and with the eggs from Hybrid pairs it is a common occurrence. I may say that from what I have observed myself, and from what others have told me, this has been quite an extraordinary season for clear eggs and addled eggs in the nests of all species of our wild birds. As to the precise cause of this, one can only speculate. Your next clutch may quite likely hatch alright. As regards the last season's colour-food you have by you, from what you say it is perfectly good, and may be used with safety, and with just as good effect as pepper newly purchased. I can assure you I myself save and use any colour-feed I have over from a season's working. It is the pepper which has been dressed with oil, etc., that is most likely to turn mouldy and rancid. Of course, I store it in sealed jars in a cool place. The Mule will steady down with the moult; you should give him a run now and again in different sized cages, and hang him in different positions. I should begin to colour-feed it at once, gradually working up to full strength. There is nothing like an early beginning, especially with young birds.

Hand-rearing Woodpeckers.

F. Nash.—I don't agree with your giving the young Green Woodpeckers raw meat. I think I can, with all modesty, claim a fairly lengthy and varied experience, and I have found the use of raw meat fraught with danger, and obnoxious to boot. Besides, it is really necessary with very few species—certainly not with Woodpeckers. If I use raw meat (say, a little with a Magpie), I first of all soak it in cold water, to wash out the blood, then cut it up into small strips for feeding purposes. I have this season hand-fed the following large British birds: two Magpies, one Greater Spotted Woodpecker, and a nest each of Lesser Spotted Woodpeckers and Hoopoes. I used egg, combined with home-made sponge-cake and ants' eggs (live ants' eggs with the three latter species), moistened with new milk, and with a little Plasmon powder mixed in. The egg and sponge cake I gradually substituted for my usual insectivorous mixture—biscuit, ants' eggs, meat meal, dried flies, and silkworm pupae. I gave in addition cut mealworms, scalded or "baked" gentles, small blackbeetles, and any flies I could get. I have not lost a single bird (except a Magpie, which escaped by opening its cage door), nor had one ailing. I certainly think that if you can manage a menu on these lines for your young Green Woodpeckers you may see them gracing the show bench during the coming season—though a two or three-year-old adult makes a fine exhibit. My 'peckers when feeding themselves get the insectivorous mixture aforementioned, with plenty of live food, and some fruit and greenfood (the latter in the food, generally). Fruit I have, to the best of my recollection, never seen mentioned by any writer as an item of diet, yet my own birds are fond of many kinds, and passionately fond of peeled grapes—even my Nuthatch has a weakness for grapes!

A Marriage that Failed.

Constant Subscriber.—Your case is not at all an unusual one. It frequently happens that a ben Canary will resolutely decline the attentions of a Goldfinch, or other cock Finch, and especially frequently when, as in your case, pairs of breeding Canaries are being kept in the same room as tbe would-be uniers. The best advice I can give you is to find the Goldie (which you say is a proved breeder) another wife. Probably your hen bas "fa'len in love" with one of the cock Canaries in the room, either through hearing his voice, or by seeing him. Maybe if you watched her closely, you would observe her get very excited when a certain cock bird commenced to sing, and probably finish by turning on the Goldfinch and viciously chase him about. If so, you might try this little dodge—one well-known to Mule breeders. Take out the cock Canary and put him in a nursery, or other suitable cage, and then hang him in front of the breeding cage containing the Goldfinch and tbe refractory hen. The hen will most likely at once "call" to him (especially if he "sings at" her), when the Goldfinch will probably immediately seize the opportunity to oblige her. In this way you may get her next clutch of eggs duly fertilised. It is best to try this plan when the hen is showing signs of building, and it is only necessary to repeat it (assuming it proves effective on each occasion) three or four times, though I have heard of once being quite sufficient.

Brevities.

Various Birds (Marcus).—Sorry to hear of your losses. Red-mite and bird-lice are the worst enemies of caged Skylarks, and must be rigorously kept under, or the birds will never sing and thrive. It is not even too late yet for your hen Greenfinch to go to nest. I have several times had a first nest from hen Britishers right at the end of July, and have heard of them right in August. The worst of late hatched youngsters is the difficulty of getting them reared. Don't lose heart; emulate the Phœnix.

Wild Seed (Davidson).—I quite agree that "Mouse-ear" (a kind of chickweed) is an excellent seeding natural food, and the sample you send is a very good one. Most of my seed-eaters like it.

Mealworms and a 'Gale (Pbilomel). — You can't prevent mealworms turning into beetles just now—it is a natural stage in the life of this appreciated delicacy. Keeping tbe tins in a cool place may help to retard the change. An adult Nightingale which has learned its natural song is unlikely to mix up with it the notes of other birds to any serious extent. Some adult-caught 'Gales, however, sing very indifferently in captivity; too sparingly altogether.

Thrush In Moult (J. B.).—The Thrush certainly will not sing until it bas got thoroughly over its moult. That it is moulting is evidenced by the feathers it is shedding. You can best assist it by feeding it well, and giving a generous daily "helping" of live-food (note reply to "Turdus" last week). Stir a teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food into its drinking water every second day (plain water in between), using a glass or pot vessel only.

Redpoll-Canary Cross (M. W. D.).—The Redpoll-Canary cross is quite a common one, and the resulting young are of little value except (1) when they are more-or-less light in plumage—or Canary-colour; (2) when they are exceptionally large. If merely "songsters" 4/6 to 7/6 would represent tbe value of the cocks, according to age and quality.

When it was Dark (Glendene).—You must not be disappointed because you have failed to breed "Canary-coloured" Linnet Mules at the first time of trying. There are plenty of fanciers who still fail to breed them after trying for a number of years. Light Linnet Mules are rare and valuable. It does not by any means follow that because you use an unmarked hen Canary you are sure to get more or less lightly marked Mules. I only wish light Mule breeding was so simple a thing. Dark is the normal colour. Birds bred dark will not come light after casting their nest feathers

Young Redpolls (No Nom-de-plume).—My own hen Redpoll reared her young successfully on a liberal supply of seeding shepherd's purse, chickweed, groundsel and various grasses. These both cock and hen (for both fed) took in very generous measure. In addition I gave the usual seeds (canary, hemp, maw, rape, charlock, and teazle), while I noticed, too, that the pan of soft-food (insectivorous mixture) was visited by the hen—I don't think the cock went to it much.

Magpie with Cold (T. J.).—It is unusual for a strong bird like the Magpie to be troubled with a cold. You must have been keeping him under very adverse conditions. I should advise you to put his cage in a cosy corner of a room free from draughts, and try the effect of a few doses of chlorodyne. Stir 6 or 7 drops into each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, using a glass or pot vessel only, and giving fresh daily. Continue for a week or ten days, and see if it looks to be affecting an improvement. If so, give a few more doses on alternate days. Don't give it too strong.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

One of the Lories.

W. A. A. Your bird is one of the Lories; it is impossible to say which, unless you give a more detailed description of plumage. You did altogether wrong in altering the diet. Give ripe fruit, milk sop, boiled rice, and at this season a leaf of fresh and tender lettuce daily. Prepare milk sop as follows: Crush two "Oshorne" biscuits, put them into a pannikin with a teacupful of milk, boil, and when cool supply to the bird. Stop sopped bread and egg at once, and diet as above; it will then gradually get the better of its indisposition. Give on two occasions only a small biscuit into which you have soaked a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia, leaving an interval of two days between. The above should be given first thing in the morning, and other food not given till it is consumed. This should help the bird to get rid of its indigestion, providing you give a wholesome diet, as above.

What Birds?

A.W.—(1) Nigerian Nightingale was just a fancy name to induce you to purchase them. They are Orange-cheeked Waxbills, natives of Africa. Their value you can easily ascertain by perusing the Foreign Bird advt. columns. Your cage is none too large for safely keeping birds in out of doors, but if you can keep it dry, and during very severe weather fasten sacking in front of the cage at nights, I am of opinion both these Zebrafinches will safely pass the winter out of doors; at any rate, so long as they appear cheerful, they will be all right. But if they begin to mope and sit huddled up in a lump, you had better take them in again at once for the winter. Diet: Canary, white, French and spray millet seeds, greenfood (chickweed, grass in flower, etc.); grit and water ad lib, for drinking and bathing. At this time of year you can get green fly from rose and fruit trees, they will be the better for it; (2): There is little doubt but what your bird is infested with lice of some kind. Catch him up and well soak him in quassia solution, repeating the operation every other day, till the bird appears comfortable again, which you can easily ascertain, for when tbe bird is free from the irritating attacks of the parasites, it will cease to pull its plumage.

Birds for Outdoor Aviaries.

Boyee.—(1).—A. Grey and Green Singing Finches, Aurora Finches, Common and Green Avadavats, Grey, Orange-cheeked, St. Helena and Zebra Waxbills, Ribbonfinches. B. Many of the above would come in this class also. Long-tail and Rufous-tail, Greenfinches, Diamond Sparrows, Madagascar and Napoleon Weavers, White Java Sparrows, Bengalese, Spice Birds, Silverbills, Bronze and White-headed Mannikins. If you do not wish to tie yourself to seed-eaters, of course I could enlarge the list with many beautiful species of Softbills. (2) 20 to 25 birds the size of a Norwich Canary. (3) You could keep any of the birds named in answer 1, with Canaries, Bullfinches, Goldfinches, Siskins, Redpolls, brown Linnets, and Twites. (4) No birds can succeed without a fair amount of sun, and the aviaries should, if possible, have a southern aspect. The roofs also of such aviaries should overhang well, so as to throw the water clear of the aviary. The hardest of birds cannot succeed if the flooring and other woodwork become saturated. Damp kills quicker than anything. But with a little consideration of the situation the aviary is to stand in, such difficulties are easily overcome. Don't put your birds in till the aviaries have been made thoroughly weatherproof. If you do not go outside the birds named in this reply, supply canary, white, French and spray millet, greenfood, grit, a little fruit, and water for drinking and bathing. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in each aviary. If your need is not met, repeat query.

Breeding Quails in Outdoor Aviary

C. M. M.—Growing grass, etc., are necessary for them, and though two pairs of Quails of the same species will not agree together, I think you would find that one pair each of Common, Chinese, and African Harlequin Quails would agree, and probably breed. Neither need the presence of the Quails interfere with your keeping Finches and the smaller species of Dove together in the same aviary. In dry corners of the aviary put heaps of brushwood, and then leave the birds to themselves. I have two pairs of the Common Quail, one pair in each aviary. They practically live upon the seed the other birds scatter on the ground. In my aviary they have access to canary, millet, rape, hemp, wheat, dari, and "paddy" rice, and also soft food, a little of which I scatter on the ground for them. If any young are hatched out, you ought, for the first week or fortnight, to get living ants' cocoons for them; then they are sure to thrive. But they soon learn to pick up seed, and the soft food mixture. I certainly consider you stand a good chance of breeding them, or would have done if you had procured them earlier. But get your stock, and if they do not breed this season, they will be established in their quarters for next. Besides the corn diet my birds are very keen on the mealworms served out to the Softbills, etc., and generally manage to get their full share; any small maggots, smooth caterpillars, beetles, etc., you can capture for them will be greedily eaten.

Treating Green Parrot, etc.

"Hainault."—Your description is too vague for me to definitely name the bird, which is either a Ring-necked or Alexandrine Parrakeet. Neither species is costly, newly imported birds being often procurable for 7/6 each, and sometimes less, when the market is over-stocked. A talking bird in good feather would be worth anything from 30/- to 60/-, or more, according to its talent. Many Parrots will not bathe themselves; such must be lightly syringed and yours will take no harm therefrom, if you keep it out of draught till dry. Your diet is correct, but I prefer the following seed mixture:—Two parts each canary seed and oats, and one part each wheat, dari, small maize and hemp seeds; well mix and always keep a supply in the cage. Give 3 doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, one teaspoonful in the drinking water with a day between each dose. Follow this by a course of Parrish's Chemical Food (making the drinking water the colour of pale port with it) and continue this till bird is through the moult. The bird should continue to do well, and soon recover condition. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee or milk sops, nor any kind of animal food.

Treatment for King Parrakeet.

Learner.—If you have a newly imported bird, I fear it will take you some months to get it into show condition. Keep it in a roomy cage, large enough for it to move about in freely without fraying or breaking its tail and wing feathers. Its principal diet should consist largely of canary seed and white millet, giving it a tablespoonful of the following three times a week:—Wheat, dari, and oats well mixed together. In addition, let it have such ripe fruit as it will eat, fresh lettuce as greenfood, piece of plain biscuit, few nuts, and a piece of clean cuttlefish, and also clean water for drinking continually in the cage. Do not give any sops, messes, or table scraps of any kind, or it will neither become nor keep fit. A little chemical food (see other replies), if it is a young bird, will be a help. It must be kept out of draught, but not coddled, nor kept in a vitiated atmosphere. If it will not bathe it must be lightly sprayed and carefully kept out of draught till dry.

Food for Tanagers.

Novice. — Tanagers require some live insects; mealworms are the mainstay in most instances, and four to half-a-dozen daily are ample. A good easily made soft food mixture consists of equal parts of crumbled sponge cake, ants' eggs (very best), dried flies, and fine ground silkworm pupæ in equal parts, well mixed and made crumbly moist. In addition let them have as much ripe fruit as they will eat, such as grapes, bananas, oranges; also our English fruits are freely eaten when in season. The other requirements are roomy cages, strict attention to cleanliness, and a daily bath, which should not be given inside the cage. The perches (natural ones are best) should be of varying thickness. If you do not care to mix your own food, consult our advert. columns; you will find several good ones advertised there. But that given above is simple and very easily prepared. Care must be exercised that stale bits of the soft food mixture are not left about the cage, and it must be freshly mixed daily, and any leavings from the previous day's supply thrown away.

Queen Parrakeet Dying.

M.C.—I much regret to hear of your loss. You are quite right; if anything goes wrong, it always seems to happen to the most valued bird. I do not advise chillies as a regular article of diet, but if one of my birds happens to be troubled with sneezing, then I give a few, but stop their use again on the cessation of sneezing. The quantity you name would do no harm, but is quite unnecessary. The diet you are giving your Kings is very satisfactory, and needs no adding to, especially for birds kept in cages. A small quantity of hemp during winter is an advantage providing it is not overdone. Re the bird you have lost, there was but little hope of its recovery when you first applied for advice, the one factor in its favour being the lengthened time it had continued in a diseased state, pointing to its being a strong bird and possessing possible rallying power. Before using the cage again for other birds, I should advise you to first paint it thoroughly over with carbolic acid, paying special attention to the crevices, afterwards thoroughly swilling it with boiling water and finishing off with a thorough swill with cold water. Leave it out of doors for a couple of days exposed to sun and air; it should then be quite safe to use again.

Brevities.

Parrot with Swelling (J. D.).—Glad to note bird is better, and that the case is not so serious as was anticipated. The probability is all will go on well, but a watch must be kept, and at the first sign of any recurrence of the swelling the treatment must be renewed. Continue Parrish's Chemical Food for at least a month, but if the bird shows any signs of a cold—put a teaspoonful of the mixture as under, with four teaspoonfuls of water, and supply only this liquid for drinking purposes till the cold yields. Mixture:—Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts.

What Bird? (Enquirer).—It is evidently one of the Platycerci, but just which I cannot say offhand. It comes very near to Bauer's or Brown's Parrakeets, both uncommon species. There is not time to make a lengthy comparison before going to press. I will definitely name the bird for you in our next issue.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Young Yorkshire (M.L.B.).—This bird, and possibly your others, died of Canary fever. The infection must have been imported into your stock either by a strange bird or an infected cage.

Broken Green Canary (J. Macauly).—Answer to "M.L.B." exactly fits your case. Isolation of healthy looking birds into perfectly clean cages, and fumigation with sulphur, is suggested.

Turtle Dove Problems.

R.S.—1. Turtle Doves will winter in an outdoor aviary, and breed there. 2. Yes. Turtle Doves are different from Ring Doves, whether by "Ring Doves" you mean the tame fawn and white collared Dove, or the wild Wood Pigeon. They are, however, closely related to the tame Dove, and of the same size and shape, but pinkish-grey in colour, with back and wings chequered black and chestnut, and a chequered black and white patch on each side of the neck. They will hybridise with tame Doves, and the hybrids are sometimes fertile. 3. I don't know where you could get any at present, and if I did, could not recommend particular dealers; as you find, the only Doves commonly on sale are the tame ones. The best plan is to watch CAGE BIRDS advertisement columns, and, if writing for the birds, make it clear that the wild Turtle Dove, not the fawn or white tame Dove, is what you want and expect to get.

Breeding Young Pheasants.

G.H.H.—Young Pheasants should be fed on the same lines as young chickens, but they need better food. For the first week or two feed on hard-boiled egg rubbed fine through perforated zinc, and mixed with stale bread-crumbs, chopped lettuce, or raw onions, and, if convenient, dried ants' eggs and dried flies. Give also Canary and millet seed. Then, as they get older, you can gradually substitute chopped cooked meat for the egg, use more meal, and get them on by degrees to larger corn. If you can give them a turf daily (or let them run on grass), and supply plenty of well-scoured gentles, they will do particularly well.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

N.B.B. and M.C. (J. Houghton).—The secretaries of the National British Bird and Mule Club are Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr, 2, Broad-street Station, London, E.C. You will, by-the-bye, find all these helpful details given in full in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL.

Wimbledon Show (H. Smith).—Your schedule, unfortunately reached us several days too late to permit of a notice being given in our last issue.

Falmouth Show (T. Burton).—Note reply to H. Smith this week, which also applies in your case, we regret to say.

A Peculiar Nesting Site (J. Thomas).—Many thanks for your interesting communication, which we shall hope to deal with next week.

Young Cuckoo (F. Nunn).—Accept our thanks for your letter, which, however, we could not publish as written, part of it being only suitable for our advertisement columns.

Glass Fountains (W. H. Lindley).—Could you not give fuller particulars? If you are referring to Mr. A. Jones, who brought out "Jones's Hygienic Fountain," then this gentleman is in Canada at present. The sanitary fountain bearing his name is sold by Messrs. Trower and Company, and possibly by others.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RED MITE AMONG WILD BIRDS.

SIR,—I visited my home at Wallington, Surrey, recently, and being informed by my parents of a pair of Greenfinches having nested in the garden, I inspected a large laburnum tree and discovered the nest with three young ones in it about three weeks old. On examining the nest and the young birds closely, I found them simply swarmed with lice or red mite; I never saw such a sight before. The pests were actually crawling over the beaks of the young birds. Yet they appeared very strong and healthy. Can any of your readers account for such a state of things? S. G. QUELCH.

A PARRAKEET THAT FLIES WHERE IT PLEASES.

SIR,—Some of your readers will possibly be interested to know that I have in my possession a ring-neck Parrakeet (Palaeornis torquata)—a cock bird and a very fine specimen in splendid plumage. I have had it 12 years; it was brought to me when it was quite a young bird from Bombay. I can let it fly at liberty from its cage out of doors, and it will return to its cage after flying about during the day. On one or two occasions it has been out all night. I might say that this place is very isolated and situated in a large park with plenty of woods and tall trees. I should like to know if anyone else has kept these Parrakeets and let them at liberty? Of course this bird is exceedingly tame and will come to me when called by its name.

W. STRIPP.

SKYLARKS BREEDING IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—I am anxious to know if breeding Skylarks in confinement is a rare thing? I am, I may say, doing so. I have a greenhouse and am growing tomatoes, bird seeds and weeds. I have three hens and a cock bird exceedingly tame. I had one nest hatched ten days ago and another eight days ago, and had three young hatched, two of which have died. I think I can blame myself for this in giving them too many mealworms. The one which is left is going on all right and runs about the greenhouse. The other eggs were fertile. The second hen hatched one young which died the second day. In trimming the tomatoes yesterday morning I found another nest of three eggs. This morning there's four. I shall be pleased to answer any enquiries, or if any of your numerous readers would like to see the conditions I am breeding under I should be pleased to fix up an appointment. G. HOFF.

[Doubtless our correspondent will have seen the letter on this subject which appeared in our columns in the issue of June 27th.—EDITOR.]

IS IT A RECORD?

Some Curious Experiences.

SIR,—Would any of your readers kindly tell me, through CAGE BIRDS, whether this is a record? I have a Roller cock paired with a Norwich hen. They went to nest with five eggs. Four of the eggs hatched out five chicks, and on breaking the remaining egg I found a fully-developed chick inside; it was dead, of course. I have still the five chicks alive and all seem to be doing well. They were hatched on the 20th and 21st of June. To pick out the twins is merely guess-work, but all who have seen them, have picked on the same two. Another strange thing about them is this: when they were eight days old I changed their nest, separating the supposed twins, which till then had laid side by side. On looking into the nest the next day I again found them side by side. Now, some say there must have been six eggs, but I am positive there were only five. Being a collier, I am not at home during the day, so could not give the hen a bath midday, as recommended by some fanciers, third and second day before the eggs were due to hatch out; I immersed the eggs in tepid water for a few seconds, and, this on two separate evenings, so I am sure of the number of eggs.

CHAS. CLIFFORD.

SIR,—I see in your valuable columns that "Son of the Rock" asks for information as to whether a nest of seven eggs laid by a green hen Canary on consecutive days is a record? I have a young Yorkshire hen which has laid two nests of seven eggs successively this year. The first egg she laid on April 21st. The first egg in the second sitting she laid on May 19th, and had seven eggs by the 24th. Both nests of eggs were fertile. Is this a record or is it uncommon?

A YOUNG BEGINNER.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

A VARIEGATED SPARROW.

SIR,—Being an old reader of CAGE BIRDS, I am naturally interested in all kinds of birds. A month ago people around here were all trying to catch a "variegated Canary," but it flew into my bedroom window, and I found that it was nothing more nor less than a Sparrow. He is variegated very much both on head, back, breast and wings, with silver grey, and his beak is longer than a Sparrow's—more like that of a Goldfinch. J. S.

NEW SOCIETY FOR WINDSOR AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to call the attention of bird-fanciers and breeders in Windsor, Eton, Slough, and the surrounding neighbourhood to the fact that a meeting will be held at the "Star and Garter," Peascod Street, Windsor, on Thursday, 16th July. The object of the meeting is to start a cage bird society. I trust all who are interested in birds will make a special effort to be present.

A. GREEN.

SOMETHING LIKE PRECOCITY!

SIR,—I paired a pair of Canaries and the hen laid three eggs, and two hatched. When they were just old enough to do a little for themselves, I had to remove them owing to the parent birds plucking them. They were then six weeks old. After removal one of them showed signs of being soft. I gave it a drop of castor oil, and three days afterwards I was very much surprised to find that one of them had laid an egg. I have brought this under your notice in the hope that you or any of your readers might be able to refer to a similar case. I may mention that I have been a breeder of Canaries for about 43 years.

THOMAS BLACK.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE GREENFINCH.

SIR,—I see from your columns that Miss Lily Butler wants to know if my five young Greenfinches are being reared by Greenfinches or fostered by a hen Canary? I should like to tell her that they are being reared by the Greenfinches themselves, and are in an ordinary 24-inch breeding-cage. All are doing well and look like becoming fine large birds. All I have to do is to keep them clean and supply them with plenty of food, which consists of hard-boiled egg, crushed hemp-seed and plenty of green-food. The other day I gave them a green pea shell, which was soon gone, so I gave them another with the peas in. The consumption of food (by all seven of them) is simply marvellous. Just lately I have added to my aviary five more young Greenies. A fine, strong Norwich Canary has got the job to rear them. She has taken well to them, and they are doing fine. C. OSBORN.

"SWEATING" HENS AND THEIR CAUSE.

SIR,—I regret I cannot help your correspondent, Mr. Clegg, by throwing further light on the subject of "sweating" hens, so-called, as suggested by Mr. Crisp in CAGE BIRDS, June 27th. I can only suggest a more natural treatment during the nesting season—i.e., ventilation. Just, for example, compare the usual nesting arrangements of the domestic Canary with a wild Finch. The Canary is usually given a felt-lined earthenware vessel, which she lines with some soft material, such as hair or wool. The cage is generally of the box fashion, and kept in a close room. The Finch in nature builds a loose nest of moss, grass, and feathers, or hair, in the fork of a tree branch. If any moisture is given off from the bird's body or eggs, as suggested, it cannot collect with such a free circulation of air. And it is reasonable to expect that the heat given off from moist bodies should have a tendency to moisture, although there may be no sweat glands.

J. W. CUTMORE.

WHAT IS "QUALITY" LINNET SONG?

SIR,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, in answer to "Constant Reader." It seems this gentleman went to hear a quality singing contest when the birds must have given their worst display of the true Linnet song. I have been to many a contest and have seen all the best birds missed. This is where the novices get a chance. If it is a quality contest, no matter how poor the song is, the judges have to give the prizes to the birds which have done best. Good quality singing Linnets are very scarce, but should "Constant Reader" ever hear one, I am confident he will be delighted. He mentions they should not be taught by a German Roller. Well, as a matter of fact, I have never heard one taught with a German Roller. I have heard them run as long as a Roller but in a different tone and style. I don't think anyone has ever heard a Linnet sing the Roller song in the exact tone. I have known Linnet fanciers put young Linnets under a good Roller, but when the Linnets have sung their song it has not been in the tone of their schoolmasters, nor yet in the same style. I see in last week's CAGE BIRDS two gentlemen reply to "Constant Reader's" letter. Mr. T. Jump writes a very sensible letter, and I agree with every word he writes. The other gentleman, who signs himself "A Lover of the Linnet," I beg to differ with. I am only a young man myself, but as this gentleman says he is a young fancier I hope he wont think me impertinent if I point out his mistakes. He says a good "quality" Linnet should start his song with scraping. This is wrong. The first note should be chattering, with a few turns—viz., tat, tat, tat, chat, chat, chat, tonic, tonic, tonic. Here are two turns, and very nice they sound, but, of course, the longer they run it the better. I don't wish to go into the song, but I should like "A Lover of the Linnet" to explain what "titing" and "jowing" are. Perhaps he means "tittering," from the Titlark. "Jowing" is a bad note here and we spell it "joeing." If it is the wish of any reader, I will write the song of the Linnet and where we get it from.

FRED ALLEN.

P.S.—I wish to thank "Hull Linnet Singer," whoever he may be, for his most flattering remarks concerning my Linnet whistling at their Whitsuntide contest.

A DAY IN EPPING FOREST.

SIR,—I should be obliged if Mr. J. S. Clarke, the writer of the article bearing the above title, would say if it is better to go to Loughton or Chingford, and if the two places are far apart? Also if the lake with an island in it and where people may be seen rowing about in pleasure boats (distance, perhaps, ten minutes walk from Chingford Station), is Connaught Waters? Also is "Fairmeads Bottom"—the home of the Nightingale—far from this? I have only been twice (Chingford each time) for a few hours, and then for the pleasure of hearing the Nightingale's song chiefly. "PHILOMEL."

ANOTHER CAPTIVE CUCKOO.

SIR,—When reading my CAGE BIRDS on Friday I noticed Mr. W. Linsey's letter about his Cuckoo, which he had given to him on June 6th. Now, I may say that I have a Cuckoo which I found in a Hay Tit's nest. From Mr. Linsey's statements, I think my Cuckoo is much the same as his own. Still, I think that while his bird finds that he can get the food put into his throat, he will not trouble to pick it up for himself. Referring to the food, I give my bird crushed hemp, bread-crumbs, and hard-boiled egg, which he fairly enjoys. I may say that I am only a novice in bird-keeping, but according to the look of my Cuckoo I think he will turn out a beauty. F. NUNN.

A POINT ABOUT EXCHANGING.

Who Should Send on First?

SIR,—I have had many replies to my numerous advertisements in CAGE BIRDS, but, with one single exception, all were marked "send on." I am therefore very satisfied with the results of my advertisements, but I think it well to bring this point to your notice. Now, everyone has a right to see that they are not cheated, and I also at times have tried to buy on the "send on" system, too. But when I do business I do it squarely, so that my conscience may be kept clear. And, whether selling, buying, or exchanging, to be asked to "send on" every time is rather too much for my sense of the fitness of things. I have "sent on" more than once since I have begun dealings in birds, and have got myself properly "done" sometimes, and it is many years since such lessons taught me a wrinkle or two worth knowing. A person does not go on in that sort of business for nearly 40 years without paying for his education, nor yet without finding out that "honesty is the best apology," as an old woman once told me. In all these years I have had very few complaints about my transactions, and have had as much as £7 "sent on" to me before parting with my goods. I hold that the person advertising and offering to take an article in exchange instead of cash for goods offered is the one having the right to see what is offered before parting with the same. If that is not so, I shall be pleased to learn the opinion of any of your numerous readers on the matter. ALICK BLAIR.

House's Canary Manual - - - - Post free. 1/2

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

A SIMPLE METHOD OF CRUSHING HEMPSEED.

SIR,—To crush hemp, and any other kinds of seed, I find this a very quick and simple way. First take an empty grit bag (one of those usually sold as 3d. bags). Place your hemp-seed inside the bag, and then put it through the mangle, when your seed will be quite ready for use. You can crush about 2lbs. in less than a minute. Those who cannot afford to buy a hemp mill will find this very useful and simple; no wheels to get clogged up, and no cleaning is to be done afterwards.

PRODUCTION OF LIGHT-MULING STRAINS.

SIR,—In reply to "Old Hand" I believe there is no certain method known of producing a light-muling strain of Canaries. If we knew this we would soon, all of us, have light-muling hens galore. I am sure many of the first-class strains were bred originally from a chance hen which happened to throw light. If you have not this tendency in the Canaries you are using, you may go on breeding and in-breeding in vain. A genuine light-muling hen which possesses pink eyes, undoubtedly shows by that feature that she has cinnamon blood in her veins, although it may, and probably will, exist in a very minute quantity—how much, I cannot say. There are black-eyed as well as pink-eyed light-muling strains, and I do not think it is absolutely necessary for a muling strain to carry cinnamon blood. A certain strain may contain a certain percentage of cinnamon blood and another equally as good for throwing light may be entirely without it. I hope the majority of old hands will open out and give us some wrinkles in the near future, as I think the most of us thirst for more knowledge in connection with this branch of the hobby. If you will permit me, I would like to congratulate Mr. Waterman on his decisive and popular victory in your Essay Competition. J. W. DICKSON.

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—I have tried dandelion for the first time recently, and my experience was that what suits one bird often upsets another. One cock went very dull and heavy, while the other sang and became more than ever lively. Directly I stopped the dandelion leaves the former was alright. I find the seeds very beneficial. We are right out in the country here, at Winchfield, and live in the woods, and so get plenty of birds, Pheasants principally. Jackdaws fly about in droves, and Jays and Wood Pigeons are soon found by their clamouring noises. The little birds fared very badly during the early nesting season and several were found dead on their nests. It was quite common to find their nests forsaken. There seems to be an increase of Whitethroats this year. I have not been out on the heath to look for nests, as a rumour is about that adders are increasing. I am, I think, best away. There do not seem to be so many Thrushes or Blackbirds. What there are of them are so tame that one Blackbird was trying to get in our house with a Jay this morning. The Bullfinch nests seem difficult to find. We hear and see the old birds and that is as far as we get. The foliage, too, is now very thick round here. MISS A. MARSHALL.

SIR,—Mr. St. John says I must not jump to the conclusion that he is not a believer in dandelion. I don't know that I did jump to any conclusion; but I could not help but infer from his former letter that he was not particularly enamoured of it. It now seems he is a great believer in it, although he advises its use with discrimination, and not all the year round. I certainly don't use it all the year round for the simple reason that for at least three months in the year it can't be got (except in the neighbourhood of Dudley). But Mr. St. John doesn't advise its use in the breeding-room—i.e., for feeding young. Now, I don't think any harm can accrue from its use if used sensibly; and I have no sympathy with breeders who get hold of a whole nest of dandelion and throw it into the cage three or four times a day. The hens can't eat it all, even if they wanted to, and the rest generally dries up and helps to fill up the cage with dirt. But sometimes it does happen that a hen will eat more than what is good for her (or the young ones), consequently, the young birds getting too much of the food that acts on a particular organ, or organs of the bird's body, it is almost sure to set up some illness foreign to the bird's nature. Therefore it should be used with discretion. Now we all know that dandelion, when used medicinally on the human body, acts as a diuretic; therefore, we must infer that it must act on the liver and kidneys of birds, clearing the system from the effects of the use of the unnatural food—egg and bread, or biscuit. My mode of procedure is as follows:—I give dandelion, chickweed, and lettuce alternately after the first week in the first nest, and about two or three days old in the later nest. But I don't give them handfuls. One small leaf of dandelion or lettuce, or two or three sprays of chickweed, as the case may be, for the first few days suffices; and I increase it as the young get older; but I never give more than three leaves of dandelion at a time or in one day. To use dandelion judiciously will not do harm, but good; as it prevents the liver and kidneys of birds from getting clogged up; it thereby enables those organs to perform the functions natural to them. But to give delicate young Canaries three or four handfuls a day, to say the least, is little short of idiotic.

GOLDFINCHES' NESTS CONTAINING SIX EGGS.

SIR,—I have just had brought to my notice what I take to be a rather unique instance of Goldfinch nesting. I have for years known of a few Goldfinches' nests, but never in my experience have I found more than two or three nests where there were six eggs to the clutch. Last season three nests were found in a gentleman's garden within a stone's throw of each other, each nest consisting of six eggs, all of which proved fertile. The young were all raised. The parent birds were all very small specimens. Another nest in a neighbouring garden had six eggs which were all hatched. For the past three or four years the nests I have known and watched belonged to birds which were poor, small birds. Why they have so deteriorated in this district (Ramsey) I cannot say. They have bred very numerously about here of late years, thanks to the various Acts in protecting them. I have often thought (though I cannot of course prove it) that it is the continual in-breeding of them which is causing the smallness of the birds. I noticed they generally bred in the same gardens and trees. If they are not the original birds they are the offspring, which come again to the district and select their old abodes. It will probably be some years before we get an exhibition bird from this district, judging from what I have seen, although there is plenty of the right kind of food always at hand. The question is, how do you account for their being so small? On a large estate six miles away over 20 nests were known last year, and on another estate nine miles away 12 were found. None of these were allowed to be touched, as the keepers protected them.

T. H. KINCH.

THE COLOUR-FEEDING OF CANARIES.

SIR,—I am writing you a few lines as a protest against a few remarks made by Mr. J. Hutchinson in his lecture, recently delivered before the members and friends of the Kilmarnock C.B.F.S., and reported by you under the heading of "The Colour-feeding of Canaries," in the issue of the 13th June. I waited to see if someone more gifted with the pen would deal with the question. In his lecture he compares the giving of colour-food to Canaries with the gardener giving his flowers various artificial manures. Now, as a professional gardener I cannot let this pass unchallenged. First let me say I have no scruples about giving colour-food. I think the birds look the better for it, and therefore I practice it. Mr. Hutchinson, however, must have a curious idea of the effect of artificial manure on the colour of flowers. Certainly on some it makes the colour brighter, by invigorating the plant which bears it; in much the same way as a good walk through country lanes would bring a touch of colour to the faded cheeks of some poor London lass. But in the case of flowers being fed with artificials, the colour would remain normal. My practical experience has taught me that artificials do not always improve colour. Might I be allowed to point out to Mr. Hutchinson that he would have been nearer the mark if he had likened the bird-keeper giving his Canaries a dose of Parrish's Chemical Food or byno phosphates to the gardener giving his plants a dose of artificial manure. Both are tonics and stimulants, not colour-feeds. I have noticed the mistake quite frequently reported in the Press. There is nothing in common with the two methods. Until the gardener gives his white flowers copious waterings of whitewash, and his beetroots Venetian red, and douses his blue violas with Rickett's blue, and his yellow dahlias with yellow ochre, I maintain he is free from the colour-feeding habit.

GEORGE J. JOHNSON.

Several letters unavoidably held over.

Some counties have a good reputation for bird life, while others are either not much frequented by wild creatures, or are sadly neglected by the ornithologist. We fear the county of Hertford is one of the latter, for according to a Herts contemporary the district is rich in bird life. Looking down a heavy list, we noticed the following scarce species included: Little Owl, Buzzard, Bittern, Shoveller, Golden Plover, Green Sandpiper, Grebe, and others; while the Nightingale, Whinchat, Blackcap, Goldfinch, and Hawfinch are mentioned as plentiful.

British Birds: Some Practical Hints on their Management.

By W. H. COMMINS.

Thrushes, Starlings, Blackbirds, Magpies, Jays, Ring-Ousels, etc., can have Indian meal, peameal, oatmeal, or barley-meal, and ripe fruits of nearly all kinds. These birds will eat all the larger varieties of insects that are to be got.

The oftener they bathe, the harder and better will be the condition of their plumage. Rain-water will be found to be the best for all birds, if you save it, which is easily done by keeping a barrel under the main stack-pipe which takes away the water from the roof. You must, of course, be careful to clean the barrel when it is dirty. Clean out the bottoms of the cages and put plenty of dry sand in.

On Keeping Hardbills.

I will now deal with Hard-bills. They must be kept as quiet as possible for a few days in a low, flat cage, such as are used by trappers for keeping hen birds of different kinds in. Bruise the seed for some days, and have "droppers," that is, tins containing water placed over the drinkers on the top of the cage. This is done so that the continual dropping of water may show the birds where the water is. The greater part of the number of Hard-bills that die, die from want of water, and not from want of seed. Do not give them any of their wild food at first. All the Finch family, and especially the smaller species, prefer hemp seed slightly cracked, or what some call bruised, and a little Canary seed and inga at first. Give freshly-cracked seed twice a day for a few days. For young birds this requires to be cracked for two or even three weeks, as their bills are very tender; but when they are older, for nine or ten days will do. Then gradually wean them on to sound seed.

This will suit Goldfinches, Bullfinches, Linnets, Siskins, etc., but Chaffinches and the Buntings, etc., require some insect food of some sort or the other, according to the time of the year when they are caught. A great many of them will live without insects, but it is much the best to give them mealworms, which will keep them right.

When to Catch Hardbills.

There are good and bad times for trapping Hardbills, and birds which are partly Hardbills. When the breeding season is over and the time for trapping arrives, we have fine weather as a rule. Then comes the flighting season, lasting for six or eight weeks. The first nest birds by that time get fine and strong, and are on the move. Depend upon it, these are the birds of the future—birds which, when properly tamed and trained, make first-class show birds. After the flight season is over in the fall of the year, and all birds are moulted off, those of the different species flock together. Our summer visitors are gone weeks before now, and we get wind, rain, and rough weather at this time, so that the birds that remain have to search about for their food. The seeds get blown away, and what remain got water-soaked. They are consequently poorer in condition when caught, and much harder to tame; and if you are not very careful you will lose a lot of those caught at this time.

After the birds are on seed, having been caught say two weeks, it is advisable to cage them off, as where there are a lot of cock birds there are quarrels and fights, which do them harm. They get on better if put in small cages at first, and when tamed put into the one you intend to keep them in.

Some get tame in a few weeks, while others take months. By carefully and often handling the small cage, the birds get tame very quickly.

The Question of Diet.

For Bramblefinches, Chaffinches, the Buntings, and Larks, a mixed diet of seeds, soft-food, and any or all in turn of the afore-mentioned insects can be given. Do for the Hardbills or seed-eaters, all that you do for the Softbills, in caging and cleaning out, giving water and baths. For Goldfinches, Linnets, Bullfinches, Siskins, Redpolls, and Twites, the food to be given as a standing diet should be three parts Canary and one part of hemp seed. You can give maw seed, just a pinch of teazle, thistle, linseed, inga, and summer rape. Almost all of this group will eat groats, which do them good.

The Hawfinch and Greenfinch will do well on hemp, Canary, and sunflower seeds. Goldfinches and Bullfinches will eat the small sunflower seeds, providing these have been previously bruised.

The smaller varieties of this group when moulting should have plenty of maw seed and extra hemp, which must be bruised; all that will eat egg-food should have it. I advised as a standing diet for this group three parts Canary and one of hemp seed. It works well with all except the Goldfinch, and that is the reason so many die; they are not properly treated. Give them three parts hemp and one of Canary seed, and fill the seed hopper every day, blowing away the husks before giving fresh seed.

Nearly all the birds of this group in their wild state live on seed of some kind or the other, and only a few will eat berries after they have taken to cage life, and that usually in the following spring. As the seeds, pods, leaves, and berries come along they can be given to them. Dandelion leaves and pods are the first that come; give about three pods a day while they are to be got. Pinch the tops before giving them to the birds as it saves a lot of fluff being blown about. All the wild seeds, leaves, and berries are good for them, but do not overdo it. Watercress, lettuce, and the flowering tops of groundsel may also be given, but they should be allowed to stand in water for some hours before being given.

Do not give any green food during frosty weather but only fresh green food; and the waste leaves, stems, or pods should be taken away at night.

When the toe-nails or back claws get too long and hook too much round the perches, carefully cut them with a sharp knife or a pair of scissors. If the feet are dirty carefully wash them in warm water.

Training for the Show Bench.

I have told you the time to get birds and the way to manage them; now let us consider them in relation to the show bench. You must train or educate the birds which you intend showing to be as steady as possible—train them so that anyone may be able to handle them without fear. The bird should be able to show itself off at its best.

In the first place get the birds to go from the stock cages to the show cages without fear. Devote plenty of time and patience in educating them to know and enjoy the show cages. The birds will become quite used to the handling of the cages, and will simply hop quickly backwards and forwards from perch to perch, which is the right sort of activity. Such activity shows good health and displays a Britisher at his best.

Either make or buy proper show cages, suiting the species of bird you intend showing. If you do not care to make them you will see cages advertised in CAGE BIRDS every week. Get the birds in the cages a day or so before showing. Be careful to show them in the right classes provided for them, and if your birds do not succeed at first try again, say, under another judge, for what pleases one judge does not always please others. Judges have their favourite species. Visit some of the best cage bird shows and exhibit a few of your specimens there also. You can then compare them with others. If you are beaten you will know where your failing is, and do not rest content until you succeed.

Master the routine of keeping your birds up to the highest level of perfection, and endeavour to maintain them in that condition, for then they are fit for admiring, exhibiting, or selling.

HOW I BREED AND REAR LINNET-CANARY MULES.

By N. Bourne.

When you see the hen sitting on the nest all night, watch next morning for her to come off; then take the egg out and put a dummy egg in its place. Do the same thing each morning until you have got three eggs. Then take the Linnet away and put the three eggs back; if the nest is very poorly made improve it before putting the eggs into it, and dust it well with insect powder.

Some Linnets will break all the eggs as soon as the hen leaves the nest; so you will have to watch the Linnet pretty closely. When your birds are paired up you must give the Linnet mixture to both birds, and when the hen has started to sit, give Canary seed alone. The eggs require sitting on for 14 days.

After the Mules are Hatched.

Give the Linnet mixture again as soon as the Mules are hatched and a teaspoonful of egg-food twice or three times a day. Also give a little green food twice or three times a day after the young are three or four days old; I prefer dandelion to any other green food.

If the Canary is a good feeder the young Mules will leave the nest when they are 15 or 16 days old, and will be ready to be caged off when about 24 or 25 days old.

If the Canary commences to build again or begins plucking the young ones, you must put the young in a nursery cage and hang it on to the front of the open door of the breeding-cage. Some Linnets will feed the young Mules; a good many, however, will not, and will soon kill them all, if permitted to do so. The hen will feed them through the wires; if the wires are not wide enough apart, you must bend some of the wires back. Put food in the nursery cage (seed, egg-food, and water) so that the young will learn to feed themselves. Of course, nursery cages can be bought ready-made, but you can make an old Linnet cage answer the purpose very well.

By the time your Mules are ready to be taken away, the hen will have laid again. If you see the Linnet feeding the Mules through the wires of the nursery cage, you will know what to do with the next nest—you can leave him with the hen in the breeding cage. You will be lucky if you get a Linnet which will not break the eggs and which will feed the young Mules.

You can keep breeding until August comes in, but avoid having young Mules in August, as the weather will be too cold for them during the moult. Continue to give the young birds egg-food after they are taken from their parents, gradually weaning them from it on to the Linnet mixture already described. Do not attempt to put the Mules in flight cages, or else you will have them killed, they are so wild in their natures; keep them in a breeding cage for a while together. They will do like this until after the moult, when they should be caged off into Linnet cages, one in each cage, when you will soon be able to tell the cocks by their song.

You may be lucky and get a light Mule good enough to show at the Exhibition, but the price they want for genuine sib-bred hen Canaries puts them out of the working-man's reach. These notes were penned with the idea of helping those fellow-fanciers who are desirous of breeding dark Mules for singing. I hope this present season will find many a working-man fancier breeding his first Mules.

Penguin Eggs.

The eggs of the Penguin are noted for their exceedingly rich flavour. They are nourishing and easy of digestion, and are eaten by all classes in South Africa. The government of Cape Colony protects the birds to ensure a regular supply of eggs. The eggs are collected until the middle of August, when the old birds are allowed to rear the young. This is no doubt wise policy, but there is just the question as to the stamina of the young birds: will they continue to be strong and healthy? The old birds must to an extent be worn out before they are allowed to propagate the species.

Through a Bird-room Window.

I say it with no egotistical spirit, that I consider those birds which rear their young exclusively on animal food are far the most difficult to breed. Indigos are no exception. They absolutely refuse to feed on anything but "live bait." Hence I think a gold medal should be given for rearing them, or better still unlimited mealworms.

The hen, as in many savage races, has nearly all the work to do: her labours are early and late. The cock sits perched on a very lofty twig and warbles approval, or finds fault like so many human fathers when things go a little wrong. When the young are getting to an interesting stage he takes a little more notice of them, and goes so far as to give them an occasional meal, but as Phil Robinson once said of his wife, when she asked to be allowed to keep a pet Canary, "God help the little bird if he has to depend on you for his food!"

Some human fathers are like my fickle Papa Indigo. They can't stand a flabby baby, but they like the chicks when they begin to take a bit of notice. Papa Indigo is the same. He first becomes fully conscious of his duties when the youngsters are beginning to cover their nakedness and to look a bit decent!

At first, the young are very dark in colour, like young Bullfinches, but naked as Robins, as we say up here. But why is a Robin naked? When the quills begin to show they look very much like a man that makes shaving badly. My children sometimes say to me, "Father, you are blue to-night." The coat of the young Indigos is a sober brown, and the old birds feed them for a long time after they leave the nest. In the same aviary was a pair of Nonpareils, and they too reared a nest at the same time as the Indigos. Mrs. Nonpareil was always mistress of the situation and took care to have first go at the food. If Mrs. Indigo ventured to try to get first served, she soon found she had to go with a flea in her ear. It was amusing to see Mrs. Nonpareil helping herself, and when her beak was full, off she would fly to the nest, and then poor little Mrs. Indigo made the best use of her opportunity, and off she would pop to her nest, and so the work went on, early and late.

I must say I never had a more interesting or yet more anxious experience than I had in breeding the Indigo Finch, and I am thankful to be able to say with Shakespeare, "All's well that ends well." The young are little brown birds like the hen.

Chapter XIV.—My White-Crested Jay Thrushes.

In Trinidad there is a certain little brown fish called the Cascaledon, possessing a flavour of the most subtle, entrancing, and captivating description. So much so, indeed, that it is said that if a man eat of it, he shall never leave Trinidad. None, having once partaken, are able to tear themselves away from the fish. All the helpless creatures can do is to succumb, and live and eat and die within reach of it.

That is much my present position. Some two years ago I was reluctantly compelled to give up birds, as I then thought, for ever. So certain was I of this, that I not only sold the birds, but even pulled down the aviaries on the principle, I believe, of removing temptation; and yet, here I am to-day, with bird fever as bad as ever.

I am beginning in a very humble way, with only just a few pairs, and yet, I am just as keen to begin as a heifer is after salt, but still I bear in mind the old Latin motto: Festina lente—"Go slowly."

In getting together a collection of birds you must bide your time and make your opportunity. Dimedium facti, qui bene cepit, habet. This is not intuitive wisdom on my part, but is gathered slowly and painfully among the thorns of experience. The longer I live, the more difficult do I find it to secure birds out of the common; so many, apparently, are on the look-out, that it becomes almost as hard to secure a strange bird, as it does for one of the unfortunate crowd to get a job in the London Docks in winter time.

Now, in starting to keep birds afresh, I find one of the greatest difficulties is to secure pairs. If you can get a cock you can't get a hen, or vice versa. Man is sent into the world unfinished. Nature seems to say to him, "You are incomplete; I have made the other part of you, but I do not remember where I put it, and you will have to hunt for it." It is much the same with birds—the pairs are there if only you can find them.

One day, during the recent Whitsuntide holidays, I took my youngest boy to Hull for the day, and while there called upon a certain well-known dealer, as in duty bound, to see what he might have. Amongst other birds I noticed two White-crested Jay Thrushes in a big cage. These the dealer declared to be a pair, but on this point I was like Hans Breitmann "Skebdigal," as the reputed lady kept on the bottom perch, like the immortal Mrs. Gummidge, in a very forlorn and subdued manner. However, the dealer, being a good sort, offered to allow me to take the birds home and try them in an aviary. I gladly accepted the offer, only to find my judgment instantly confirmed, for the reputed hen spent the whole day in seeking first for one city of refuge and then another and to save "his" life I had to remove him to other quarters. It was now a question of "Cherchez la femme."

Half a Wife Better than None.

Happening to write to a bird-friend, announcing my return to the birdy world and asking him if there was anything he had he could offer me, he returned a long list, and amongst others I saw scheduled a Crested Indian Thrush. I accordingly wrote off for it on the chance that it might be a White-crested Jay Thrush and a lady to boot. A few days later the bird came to hand, and whatever else it might claim to be, it certainly belonged to the ragged regiment. I felt sure, however, at the first glance that I had got a hen, and my private opinion was at once confirmed by the cock when I introduced the stranger, for after contemplating each other for a moment with the most intense curiosity, they went off into a perfect shout of welcome. I think the cock's shout was one of astonishment. The hen was perfectly naked from the middle of the breast, and to increase the grotesque effect she had three broken and disjointed feathers in her tail. However, the gentleman apparently considered that half a wife was better than none, and very soon they were seated amiably side by side. The enjoyment of female society, like other things, depends upon the scarcity!

I feed the Thrushes on my own mixture—which, of course, with pardonable egotism, I think to be the best in the world—and a fair supply of mealworms and "black clocks." The poor clocks have a bad time. Each leg is chopped off scientifically before the body is swallowed. The Thrushes are evidently vivisectionists on principle—much like the old lady who, after listening to a very violent anti-vivisectionist sermon, remarked, "It is, perhaps, all true, but I must confess that I like to eat my oysters alive!"

I cannot say that the Thrushes are "sweet singers," like David. Their voices are loud and persistent; probably they would describe their song ("more David") as "making a cheerful noise." If any fresh food is put into their dish they exclaim at the top of their voice, "Pow, pow, pow, pow—pow, pow," reminding one irresistibly of Hadyn's remark on hearing the singing of a Presbyterian congregation, "Ach, Gott is merciful!"

In appearance, my friends are of plain and sober garb, dressed in russet brown, with white heads and waistcoats, and elongated black eye patches. They have a curious habit of playing leap-frog over each other's back sideways—a most comical sight.

THE COLOUR-FEEDING OF CAGE BIRDS.

By Mr. DOOLAN.

Being a Lecture delivered before the members and friends of the Ayr and District C.B.S. on May 30th.

Having been asked by our worthy secretary to give you a lecture I thought, considering the time of year, I might do worse than make "The Colour-feeding of Cage Birds" my subject. Now, colour-feeding by many weak-minded fanciers is termed "faking." This term I do not altogether like. Do not poultry exhibitors dress the combs and legs of their birds with oil or vaseline, as the case may be, before sending them to shows? Do not pigeon fanciers try to improve their birds before exhibiting them? And what of the "doggy" men? Even the gardener resorts to chemicals and manures of various kinds to improve his flowers and plants. Yet who would accuse him or any of the others of faking, and where would they be to-day if they had not used such things to assist them in their work?

The Value of Colour-feed.

What then is colour-feeding? Is it faking? Certainly not, so long as it is done when the birds are moulting. Some people, again, ask why we should colour-feed birds at all? Our answer to that is, because it improves them so to do. What would a Norwich Plainhead be like without colour-feed; and what would a Border Fancy be without colour-feed?

Some of you, I see, question this statement; but on this point I am personally quite clear. What would a dark Mule or Hybrid be without colour-feed, and of wild birds, in whose cases colour-feed has been proved of the greatest value, their name is legion. Colour-feeding, then, is a necessity if you wish to keep abreast with the times. I consider it, too, quite legitimate.

Having, I trust, proved my case, is it not more fancier-like to adopt this plan, than to resort to the weekly moult? I hope you quite understand what I mean; for those of you who do not, I may refer to hand-painting with such materials as diamond dyes and Condy's fluid, or the well-known permanganate of potash, etc., etc. What, then, is colour-feeding? What do we do when we colour-feed? that is the question.

Colour-feeding is making more or less than the employment of something called "colour-feed" for the improvement of the colour in birds, which is theirs by nature. For you must bear in mind that if the colour is not there to begin with, you cannot produce it by colour-feeding. Here, then, another question arises. Say you have colour-fed your birds for a season and failed to get what is required on the show bench. This at once, and in itself, proves that there is something wrong. A change of blood is necessary. I know I am on very debatable ground. If you double-yellow, or double-buff, for a few seasons, you will no doubt improve your colour; but then, you will also lose type, without which you will be absolutely left behind. Green, Cinnamon, and Lizard Canaries are all foundations of colour, each one having its advocates; but use any of them too freely, and what is the result? The whole of your stock becomes variegated and green in colour—not a clear bird among them. The free use of these would also have a strong tendency towards the production of dark beak and legs; although these are not serious faults; yet in a clear show-bird it certainly tells against it.

The Kinds Considered.

When colour-feeding was first introduced the article used was hot cayenne pepper, and by the judicious use of hot pepper it is quite possible to bring a bird to almost any shade of colour you desire; but since those days there has been quite a lot of cool and tasteless peppers put on the market, samples of which will be submitted to you to-night. There is no getting away from the fact that if you want to be at the top of the tree hot pepper is the thing; that is, providing your birds will eat it. Some birds will eat it ravenously, while others will refuse point-blank to have anything to do with it. Some of the cool peppers are greater colour-producers than others.

A great many fanciers contend that peppers are not injurious, but with this I cannot agree. It certainly does birds no good, except to improve the colour of the plumage.

How to Feed.

Now, when first you decide what vendor you are going to get your feed from, mind you don't stick at 3d. or 6d. a lb., for a good food is worth all the difference you can pay. Having decided on your vendor and your colour-feed, you must next have suitable cages; I prefer those of the box-pattern, wired in front only. These ready, you will all agree that what is wanted is a good, speedy moult, as speedy as possible, in fact; and to have this the bird must be kept in the best of health.

About ten days before I start colour-feeding I give the birds the liquid from sarsaparilla root (mashed the same as tea) to drink instead of water. Then I mix up one hard-boiled egg, half a teaspoonful of feed, one biscuit (plain Abernethy), one teaspoonful of coarse, brown sugar, ten drops of olive oil and a pinch of linseed meal. You need not give the linseed meal till the birds have started to moult properly. After two or three days gradually increase the colour-feed until you are putting two teaspoonsfuls to the above-mentioned mixture.

Now, ninety-nine fanciers out of every hundred tell you to let the seed-box stay in the cage all day, but I only wink my eye at that. I have yet to find the bird that will eat colour-feed while the seed-box is on the cage. I have visited most of the prominent exhibitions in the west of Scotland and I have yet to find the one who leaves the seed-box on. I mix my food at night, and give a teaspoonful to each bird at 6 a.m. Then, when I come home from work at 4 p.m., I give a pinch of hemp and half a teaspoonful of linseed. Of course, you must clean the box every time you feed them.

Some Moulting Hints.

Now, those of us who do not possess birds that can win every time they go out, sometimes try to get our birds ready for the early shows before the deck sweepers are out, and we are inclined to push our birds out half moulted. Let me tell you what to do when your birds are well on feed. Put the perches well down and pull out the tail and flight feathers of the birds, as I have had birds nearly moulted, but which could not be sent out because their tails and flights had not grown. By adopting this method you have birds with flight and tail feathers and full-grown perhaps before the body is half moulted. Then if any of your birds are backward at all in breaking into moult, a change of temperature will often bring the desired effect; if it does not, place a small piece of crystal of ammonia, the size of a pea, in the drinking water, this having a tendency to slacken the feathers.

Then some of you, maybe, have had birds which have stuck in moult. The linseed meal comes in handy here. If you use the meal in the feed you will never have a bird stuck in the moult. I may just state here that if any of you have buff Canaries to feed, give the seed-box half an hour every morning; by so doing you help to add to the nice mealiness, so much desired in buffs.

Be sure and measure your food every time, and don't allow your birds to come out patchy, and therefore of no use for the show bench. Do not forget to put a piece of sulphate of iron in the drinking water twice a week. This acts as a tonic, keeps the bowels right and mainly fixes the colour. I always keep a piece of muslin over each cage, as this keeps the light from taking the colour out of the birds and, moreover, keeps the dust off them.

Give a bath once a week after they are half moulted. When they have nearly finished moulting, put a piece of carrot (both boiled and raw) in the wires, and it will tighten up the feathers. If your birds can win in other points, and you follow these directions, I don't think you will be beaten on account of colour.

This page will consist of topical hints, addressed chiefly to beginners, concerning every branch of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the notes will be contributed from time to time by various leading experts.

The Need for Ventilation.

Now that the "glass" indoors even in favourably situated places is beginning to mount and range anywhere between seventy and eighty degrees, the need for ventilation should be writ large in every bird-room, and kept prominent in every bird keeper's mind. Be a stickler for ventilation even though by being so you run the risk of having your friends "twit" you with having "ventilation on the brain," or air in the space which nature designed for brain. Too much fresh, pure air it would be impossible to give the birds, and the reverse is so far from being the fact that it is in the vast majority of cases a really difficult matter to give enough.

Where a proper system of ventilating shafts is not provided, open doors and windows should be the order of the day, and a pane or two of glass removed from the window, or windows, and securely covered over with wire gauze should be the means of admitting fresh air at night.

If there is any danger of intrusion of cats or any such undesirable visitors still keep doors and windows open wide by day and supply their places with temporary covers made of stout wire netting of small mesh fitted on to a framework of wood which will occupy the same position as the closed door or window when either is open. In short, let nothing stand between you and a plentiful supply of fresh, cool air. It will be a thousand times better for the health of the birds than all medicines and nostrums in the world.

Do it Without Draught.

But notwithstanding the urgent advice for the admission of fresh air, ad libitum, there should be enough of common-sense discretion employed to avoid any strong draughts blowing direct into the cage. On a sweltering hot day one is apt to think only of the intensity of the heat, and forget the fact that even on such a day a draught can, under favourable conditions, blow quite chilly, and exposure to these draughts is extremely risky to both man, beast, and bird. Therefore, spare no trouble in seeing that draughts are either obliterated or diverted from blowing directly into cages.

It does not require any extraordinary amount of ingenuity to manage this by suspending a kind of improvised drapery, or arranging portable folding screens to break or divert the current of air. Towels, tablecloths, or even sheets, which may be surreptitiously borrowed from the household supply, will make very effectual screens, as also will large sheets of paper. The latter, however, has one drawback: that unless it is pasted down on something its flapping and rustling noise is rather a disturbing element to the birds.

But not much skill is required to make a folding framework of light wooden strips similar to the clothes-horse of the laundress, or a fire screen, now a prominent feature of the domestic hearth. Cover the framework with coarse canvas, fastening it on with small tacks or glue, and then decorating it with some ornamental objects which may also serve a useful purpose in the room—say the fanciers' charts, or coloured plates, and coloured post cards of typical birds, which have been issued with CAGE BIRDS. The result will be a practically useful article in a dual sense, and a tasteful decoration

A Cooling Diet.

The food should also receive some attention during periods of intense heat. With birds engaged in rearing young it is not much that can be done in this direction except keeping them well supplied with cooling green stuff. For this purpose few things are better than lettuce and chickweed. Were it not for appearing didactic one might go farther and say nothing is better, and few things as good.

A tiny pinch of Epsom salts may also be added to the water every few days, and a larger dose for birds that have not very young chicks—say, as much as will cover a threepenny piece for birds rearing young—and this amount will not do the young the least bit of harm, nor double the quantity for other birds. In each case the quantity named should be dissolved in each ounce of water used for drinking purposes. Where one has any doubt as to the quantity contained in a fluid ounce, two ordinary-sized tablespoonfuls may be taken as one ounce, and is near enough correct for the purpose.

This treatment will go far to preserve the health and vigour of the birds during the very warm weather, but all birds that are not breeding should also have all heating and constipating items of diet withheld, or at least very seriously curtailed until the heat wave is gone.

Looseness of the Bowels.

If there appear to be a little looseness of the bowels when the food is thus altered to suit the prevailing conditions, there is nothing whatever to be alarmed at as long as the birds are apparently bright and healthy. If one went to the trouble of catching wild birds at this season, he would almost invariably find they were considerably looser in bowels than our caged birds. So much is this the case that if cage birds were to become only just about as loose they would in all probability be promptly dosed for diarrhœa. Still, if one really fears the birds are getting too loose, either a crystal of pure sulphate of iron the size of a large hemp seed, or about as much citrate of iron and quinine as will cover a threepenny piece dissolved in the drinking water should suffice to correct it.

For softbilled British or foreign birds a liberal supply of ripe, juicy fruits and berries, such as cherries, strawberries, raspberries, or currants, may be very usefully employed, in addition to an increased supply of natural insects, caterpillars, larvæ, and the thousand and one other forms of insect life which are now so abundant everywhere. Mealworms will be getting scarce, and the stock, if one breeds his own supply, should be husbanded now, whilst it is so easy to obtain other insect food which is at least just as good, and in many cases much better than the artificially bred stuff.

An Unstinted Water Supply.

For drinking purposes it is scarcely necessary to say that the supply should be kept as fresh and as cool as possible. The vessel should be emptied and well washed out daily. Never adopt the lazy method of filling up the vessels without first emptying out the stale water and rinsing the vessel. It is not only a dirty practice, but at this season is a really dangerous one, as one is apt to learn when too late by the carrying away of a good stock of birds by an epidemic.

In the largest and airiest of rooms once a day is quite seldom enough to change the water, and in small, cribbed, and close rooms it is certainly not enough to ensure the purity of the water. In these places it should be changed morning and night.

The bath should also be very freely employed. It will, in fact, do no harm if a bath is hung on each cage just after breakfast and allowed to remain in position until five or six o'clock in the evening. There will be some birds who may not bathe more than once in a day, but the bulk of those that do bathe will return to the bath again and again after the first vigorous bathing, and take just a little dip every hour or two in spells of great heat; whereas at ordinary times these same individuals will not take advantage of the proffered bath every day. This goes to prove that when given the opportunity the birds will adapt themselves to the prevailing atmospheric conditions in the best way to suit their own individual needs.

'Ware of Mites.

Yet another thing the bird keeper must keep a very sharp eye upon now is the possibility of red mites obtaining a footing in the cages. At times like the present everything favours their increase, and this they can do at a most wonderfully rapid rate if one's efforts to keep them at bay are relaxed for a short time. Regular and efficient cleaning of the cages does not always suffice, as the tiniest crack or hole about the cage will often hide, literally, hundreds of mites, of which not one will be seen or suspected whilst the cage is being regularly cleaned and well attended to.

It should always be assumed that the nucleus of a red mite attack is lurking in every cage, and the cage treated accordingly. If there is no such danger of attack, no harm is done; but if the danger is really there, and the chances in favour of it, the precautions taken will be of incalculable benefit in keeping the foe at bay.

A good mite destroyer should be consistently used when cleaning out the cages, and a little quassia added to the bath about twice a week. This will materially help you in the usual cleansing operations to attain the desired object.

(Our invaluable "Breeding Room Register.")

A well known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

A Saucy Parrot.

I know a Parrot which is very saucy. It says, "Pretty Polly," "Pretty dear," "All the way from Cashmere," "Mrs., fetch the doctor, Polly is sick," "Mrs., quick, quick, quick." It also says other things. It lived to be very old.—Sent by Mabel Daft (no age given), 67, Duke Street, New Basford.

*A Talkative Goldie.

My father bought a Goldfinch about a year ago, which is very tame. He takes pips from our fingers and says "Joie, sweet Joie." He always greets my father (when he comes off duty) with a merry "Tweet-tweet." He makes a great fuss when we cover him up at night. He has a lump of sugar in his cage, which he uses as a table.—Sent by May Bemrose (age 11), 65, Egypt Road, New Basford, Nottingham.

*Feeding the Young Canaries.

My father keeps a lot of Canaries and I help him when he feeds them. I also clean the cages for him. One day we found a certain hen, which had three young ones (all less than a fortnight old) had died. Father did not know what to do, so it being my holiday-time from school, I brought up the little Canaries on egg-food. I used the end of a stick to do this with. They are now three very beautiful birds.—Sent by Lily Yates (age 10), 15, Whaley-street, Burnley.

The Bold Blue Tits.

A Blue-Tit (commonly called "Billy Biter") for two or three years now has built its nest in a hand-pump at Scarboro' gasworks. The pump is fixed to a syphon near one of the gas-meters and is used about twice a week. The rod which works the bucket moves by the side of the nest. This year the Blue Tit laid eight eggs and has hatched them all. The birds get in and out of the spout where the handle is fixed to the bucket-rod. When the old ones were sitting on their eggs we could work the pump and they would not come off. They will now feed their young when we are very close to them.—Sent by H. Geo (age 12), 11, Brassey-terrace, Paley-road, Bradford.

Canary Breeding for Beginners Post free, 7d.
By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird room, egg food, nest building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Watching Birds Unobserved.

Leaving the Buntings and Linnets among the furze and underwood, we take the footpath leading to the downs. Along this shady lane wild birds are fairly numerous. The Nightingale, Blackcap, Whitethroat, and others attempt each season to build, but the children from the cottages hard by prevent their settling down to serious work, although, doubtless, a brood or two are reared in the thickest of the foliage. A few Wagtails can generally be seen here, as they are able to settle quietly on the cultivated ground at the back of the asylum. Peeping through a gap in the oak fence we were able to watch the bird-life unobserved. There is something particularly fascinating in observing birds under such conditions. Their actions are then so very different, and the birds move and act with confident security. Two or three Wagtails were running along the edge of the field or catching insects by the water. A young Thrush was making his toilet, regardless of the fact that the water used for the purpose was anything but clean, and probably came from some leaky sewer. A Blackbird alighted on the top of the fence, bounding off quicker than he came when he found we were in possession. And, wonderful to relate he did it noiselessly. I firmly believe he was too frightened to cackle.

Long-eared Owl at Blackburn.

According to a local contemporary, the Long-Eared Owl breeds in the district of Blackburn. The feathers of the head stand up, closely resembling the ears of a cat, giving the bird quite a feline appearance.

A Glimpse of the Greenfinch.

"The Greenfinch in the hawthorn yonder has been there since I came out, and all the time has been happily talking to his love. He has left the hawthorn indeed, but only for a minute or two, to fetch a few seeds, and comes back each time more full of song-talk than ever."

Habits of Partridges.

Young Partridges have had to move from the grassland to the corn fields, for the mowers have been busy among the russet-coloured fields of seeding grass and sorrel. The old Partridges are adepts at shamming lameness to draw one's attention from the young broods, and the mother does not mind exposing herself to human beings or even to dogs when necessary. Pheasants, on the other hand, will crouch down among the long grass and will teach their young by example to do the same.

Martins Away from Their Nests.

The House Martins come up from the village to hawk over the meadows and round the elm trees on the higher ground. Up and down they fly during the long summer's day. It is delightful to lie down upon the grass and watch them in the bright sunlight. When passing the great masses of sunlit leaves they are hardly discernible, the light is so strong upon both; but as they cross the shadow the white patch on the back aids the eye to follow. They turn, exposing the light underpart, and are back again like a flash. They appear never to visit their nests under the eaves of the houses in the village, but perhaps they work in relays, and we are only watching the same bird for a brief space.

An Inhuman Practice.

Some time ago an Act was passed prohibiting the use of the pole trap, but it is much to be feared that very little notice has been taken of it. Hawks and Owls have a habit of perching upon any bare branch, top of a pole, or other coign of vantage where they can get an uninterrupted view of the surrounding district. The gamekeeper is a keen observer of nature, and knows well the habits of these birds. So, setting up a pole in a clearing of the woods, he places a trap upon the top and so catches the unsuspecting bird, generally by the leg; he is not there at the time to put it out of its misery, and so the poor, fluttering wretch is left until the gamekeeper happens to pass that way again. The sufferings of a creature in this position must be intense, and in many cases they are left to die a slow, lingering death. These tragedies are generally enacted in the depths of the woods, where none but the keeper and his employer are allowed to wander, so that detection is not likely to take place. It is only through the strict orders of the employers that the practice can be stopped, and we hope they will take the matter up.

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping. That volume is

and this year it has made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

Such Marvellous Value has never before been offered.

See what You Get for Your Money.

Coloured Plate.

An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramble-finch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

Calendar.

A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"Work of the Year."

A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"Washing and Preparing Birds for Exhibition."

Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries."

A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many excellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"Pairs Matched for Breeding."

A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"The Breeding of Hybrids."

An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"The Keeping of British Birds."

A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"Some Easily Obtainable Foreign Birds.

An account of some pretty and hardy species, with information on their caging and feeding.

"Review of the Exhibition Year."

Every breed of Canary, together with Hybrids, British and Foreign birds, has its progress on the show-bench during 1907 dealt with by leading judges, specialists, and experts, and the names of the principal winning exhibitors are given.

"The Diseases of Cage-Birds."

A feature in itself worth the whole cost of the volume. Diseases and accidents are described, and the best medicines and methods of treatment stated in simple language, and very fully and completely. It will save you many valuable birds.

"Glossary of Terms."

The curious terms used by fanciers are fully explained. Reference to the alphabetically-arranged columns will at once tell you the meaning of such expressions as jonque, leafy feather, mooning, rowing, and the like.

In addition to these features will be found a

Directory to Cage-Bird Clubs, Associations and Societies, with particulars of subscriptions, etc., list of Officials and Secretary's name and address.
Directory to Prominent Breeders and Exhibitors of Cage-Birds.
